A Fine Specimen.

Mr. H. W. Bryant returned Sunday afternoon from a visit to relatives at Gourdins. Mr. Bryant speaks enthusiastically of the crops along the Santee river. To emphasize his remarks he showed us a stalk of cotton from the field of Mr. W. D. McClary, which measures 41ft high, contains 106 bolls and is still green and healthy. This is said to be an average stalk from a 4 acre field. The seed are the "Excelsior" three limbed variety, which was on exhibition from Marlboro county at the Charleston Exposition.

POWERFUL VOICES.

Some Historic Shrickers Who Antedated the Famous Stentor.

The question has often been asked, "Who was the most loud voiced man of history?" The answer usually is that it was Stentor, of whom Homer says his voice was as loud as that of fifty other men combined and from which we get the phrase "stentorian voiced." But we have record of two historic "shrickers" anterior to Homer. I agree of land in Johnson township belonging to Eliza Napoleon and against the twelve men of the city of bounded by Brunson Snowden on all Sarton and that Levi beheaded one man with his own sword. In chapter 88, verse 41, of the book referred to the story is related in the following words: "And the sons of Jacob seeing that they could not prevail over the twelve. Sincon gave a loud and tremendous strick, and the eleven remaining men were stupped by the awful shriek."

In chapter 39, same book, werse 19. we find the following account of the buttles of the sons of Jacob with the tuhabitants of the city of Gaash. It 14-3: seems as though the battle was both in the front and in the rear and that the warriors on the wall were throwing spears and burling stones upon the sons of Jacob. What next occurred, as related in chapter and verse above cited, is recorded in these words:

"And Judah, seeing that the men of Gassh were getting too beavy for them, gave a piercing and tremendous shrick, and all the men of Gassh were terrified at Judah's cry, and men fell from the wall at the sound of his powerful shrick, and all those that were without as well as those within the city were greatly afraid of their lives."

The Canary Is a Little Pig.

The capary is always regarded as a small eater, just us the pig is notorious for its gluttony. People with small appetites are often twitted for not enting more than enough to fird a canery. and this led a man who was a they eater to watch the yeliow bird and report.

He found that a canary that weighed 247 grains ate just thirty-two times its own weight in a month; that is, it ate rather more than its own weight on an average every day. Anyone who watches the little bird will notice that it is atways cating. Now, says the investigator, a pig doesn't eat its own weight every day, glutton as it is. Hence be thinks that the causry deserves to be classed as a little pig.-London An-

Ran Without Lega.

A certain congressman has a smert granddaughter, whose clever sayings are the delight of her parents. The other day she came to her grandfather with her face all smiles.

"tirandpa," she said, "I saw something this morning running across the tothen floor without any legs. What do think it was?"

Mr. Congressman studied for awhile and gave up. "What was it?" be asked. "Water." said the youngster trium-Phantly .- St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Absentminded.

A woman who has an absentminded husband who will bear watching was startled a few weeks ago on her way down the church aisle to see that the good man, who had preceded her, was still wearing his bat. She transmitted a signal to him to remove the objectionshie article, when she was still further hereified by seeing him remove his tee a instead.

Inseparable.

"Now, then, Willie," said Uncle John, "aren't you tired looking at the monkeys? "All right." reluctantly replied the boy, who was on his first visit to the 200. "Now let's go to the place where the organ grinder's cage is."-Philadelphia Press.

The man who covets his neighbor's bouse might change his mind if he could look into the cupboards.

The Word Treacle.

The word treacle has undergone an odd modification. At first it was applied to such decoctions of roots or other substances as were deemed beneficial in medical practice; then, as these were frequently sweetened, it came to mean any sweet concection or confection. and lastly, as molasses was the sweetest of all, this name was exclusively applied to sirup.

THE BEST METHOD OF FRYING POOD.

Some Valuable Suggestions and How to Get Satisfactory Results. No Need of Having Dyspepsia.

Most physicians, especially in the northern United States, say that fried food is responsible for most of the dyspepsia, especially in the south, where frying is most prevalent.

This is no doubt true, in a broad and average way, but it is not necessary that it should be true. Too much grease of any kind, and in any way, is certainly bad for the digestion; but the conclusion must not be too hastily reached that fried food is necessarily greasy. Grease for cooking should be or any kind, and in any way, is certainly bad for the digestion; but the conclusion must not be too hastily reached that fried food is necessarily greasy. Grease for cooking should be looked upon merely as as a medium for communicating a high degree of heat. It is not usually possible to cook things in water to a higher temperature than 212 degrees, and hence in many cases it is necessary to cook meats, etc., a long while at this temperature to get them done. But it is easily possible to cook things equally well done in grease in a much shorter time, on account of the higher temperature that may be reached—sometimes 300 to 400 degrees. The true way to cook in grease is to get it very hot before introducing the meat or other article. When it is dropped in the higher degree of heat immediately chars the outer surface and closes the pores, so that the grease cannot get inside. It is important to keep the heat up, and not to put the articles into the grease so fast as to lower the temperature. When done, they should be immediately removed and laid on a cloth to absorb the adhering grease. Many cooks take a frying pan off the fire with the eggs or meat in it, all cooked, and leave it so until served. This is the next best way to let the grease soak through to the centre. The very best way to soak the grease in, and the very best way to soak the grease is not hot enough.

Frying is generally a most wasteful manner of cooking, for the reason that so much of the grease soak thrown away after the article is cooked. This is generally unnecessary. If the frying has been properly done, the grease has not taken up much from the article cooked. The grease may be poured from the frying pan into a vessel of hot water, when most of the foreign matter will settle and the pure grease will float, after somewhat washing itself in the water. It may then be used again and again with the best results.

There is naturally a smell from any frying grease. In Europe, where many kinds of grease and offs are used for frying, people become a rying grease. In Europe, where hany kinds of grease and ofis are used for frying, people become accustomed to the different smells, and do not mind them. In this country all are accustomed to the smell of frying hog lard. When it was first proposed to cook with cotton oil the new smell was objectionable, especially the smell of hadly refined oil, and thus there grew a prejudice against its use. Another cause for bad results with the oil was the fact that often times the cook would not walt for the oil to get hot enough before putting it in the articles. When using lard, the cook would naturally wait for it to melt, and it would get hot without provoking impatience. ally wait for it to melt, and it would get hot without provoking impatience. But the oil looks ready when it is first put in the frying pan, and there is a temptation to use it too soon. There has been much steady work done by those who make cooking compounds from cetten oil, with a view to reducing or disguising the smell. The result has been most gratifying. There are several concerns making a specialty of it refined for use in cooking, without further manipulation. The Wesson Process company of Savannah, Ga., has been very successful in this line and will be glad to mall cook books.

There are also a number of highly satisfactory cooking greases made been very successful in this line and will be glad to mall cook books.

There are also a number of highly satisfactory cooking greases made from cotton off and beef fat, such as "Palmatena" and "Snow Drift," both of which products are extensively manufactured by the Southern Cotton Oil Company of the Carolinas and Georgia at their works in Savannah. They are both high class and reliable products in which the pure cotton seed oil is used and they resemble lard in appearance and results, but are more satisfactory and healthy, and which are superior to hog lard from every point of iew. That they are much more healthful there can be no doubt.
