Bone Meal as a Fertilizer.

Mr. Groome, of Warrenton, Va., recently wrote the Bureau of Soils, at Washington for an explanation of the reason for the long continued appreciable benefit derived from the application of raw bone meal as a fertilizer. The following is the reply réceived from the soil chemist, and will no doubt be read with interest:

In reply to your favor of the 12th inst. I would say that we recognize that such fertilizers as bone meal will continue to exercise an influence over crops for a considerable length of time. But taking fertilizers in general, and especially the more soluble ones, it seems to be a general law that they prove most beneficial in the initial stages of plant growth before the plants have developed a large and vigorous root system and are, in a sense, better adapted to looking out for their own food supplies.

Raw bone meal is essentially calcium phosphate, and is slightly soluble itself. But it is one of a class of substances which is readily acted upon and decomposed by water, forming, in this case, lime and phosphoric acid; and while the lime goes into solution to but a very slight extent, a fairly large amount of phosphoric acid-is disselved. The amount that will be dissolved depends largely on the proportion of solid phosphate to the volume of water. While it takes some days for the solution to dissolve all the phosphoric acid it can, the larger part of the Virginia Mammoth to the acre. is taken up in a few hours. Carbon They can be mixed with the corn in dioxide, which is always present in the soil and soil mixture, helps to dissolve phosphoric acid from calcium. although this would not be expected on the basis of current theories. seems to be crazy over The world quantity. Indeed, those who speculate in raw material are interested in quantity-it gives them a greater range of speculation-a greater opportunity to beat down first prices, the prices paid the producer, and also a better opportunity to push up the price on the second purchaser. President Walmsley, of the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association, in a recent speech before a meeting of that body, declared "that the supply of cotton from our fields must be increased." Why? That the growers may receive greater rewards? Not much! That the trade may be free from "unlawful high prices." That is the slogan everywhere, "Raise more and sell for less." Not so with Up-to-Date. We want the farmers to produce all the world needs, all it will consume-at a fair price, and let the toil of the producer be rewarded first. Under no circumstances do we want them to produce so much that it puts them at the mercy of speculators and capitalists. We also want to see farmers in a condition where, if they over-produce one year they may hold the surplus on the farm and bring it forth in seasons of scarcity. This will be much better than holding surplusses-whether real or only temporary-in elevators or warehouses .-
