Barnato Won the Bet.

There is a legend of an amusing competition in connection with a discussion regarding the financial value of literary genius. Barney Barnato, who was a genius, but not literary, began to chaff some financial journalists. "You bloomin' fellers don't know nothin' about literature. I'll back myself to write a little piece against any of yer."

The challenge was laughingly accepted, and a referee appointed. The papers were thrown into a hat, and the referee, after analyzing them, said: "Gentlemen, I am bound to say that the palm must be awarded to Mr. Barnato. His piece is terse, faultless in form, irreproachable in matter. You yourselves shall judge." And he read out the following essay:

I promise to pay to Mr. X. the sum of $100 for his kindness in acting as referee in this interesting competition. B. I. BARNATO.

The award was unanimously confirmed by the competitors, and the check was duly honored.--London Telegraph.

Delicately Put.

"A footman," said a banker, "called his master up by telephone and said: 'I regret to inform you, sir, that your house is on fire and fast burning down.'"

"Oh," cried the master, "what a terrible misfortune! But my wife--is she safe?"

"Quite safe, sir. She got out among the first."

"Are my daughters--are they all right?"

"All right, sir. They's with their mother."

"There was a pause. Then:

"And what about my mother-in-law, James?"

"That, sir," said the footman suavely, "was what I wished to speak to you about, sir, particularly. Your mother-in-law is lyin' asleep in the third story back, and knowin' your regard for her comfort, sir, I wasn't sure whether I ought to disturb her or not, sir."--Los Angeles Times.

Which is Your Shortest Hour?

"What is your shortest hour in the day?" asked a business man of an acquaintance. "Don't say you have none. You have, although you may not know it. Everybody has. Of course, reckoned by actual measurement, each hour is composed of sixty minutes, yet notwithstanding that chronological exactness the hours vary in length. My shortest hour is from 2 to 3 o'clock in the afternoon. I find upon inquiry that this is the feeblest period for many people. In my case so swiftly do those sixty minutes hurry by that I try to crowd into them as many of the disagreeable, yet inevitable, things of life as I possibly can. If I have to interview a bore, I see him then; if I have to visit the dentist, I do it then. That hour is bound to slip away quickly, no matter what happens; therefore the agony of disagreeable scenes seems of shorter duration."--New York Sun.

Naked Truth.

An encounter of wits once took place between the late Eugene Field and a New York woman. It was at dinner, and the woman was in evening dress, which was rather décollete. After a skirmish between the two relative to the respective merits of a well known author it would seem that Field came off second best.

"Oh, Mr. Field," exclaimed the woman exultantly, "you must admit that you are fairly beaten at your own game!"

Field bowed politely and, with a smile, promptly rejoined, "At any rate, Miss Blank, I have one consolation--you can't laugh at me in your sleeve."--Lippincott's.

Legend of the Violet.

A Latin poem of the sixteenth century has a pretty legend of a violet that, in mythological days, was a maiden called Ianthia, one of Diana's nymphs. She attracted the attention of Apollo, whose admiration she did not return, and, flying from his pursuit, she implored Diana to destroy the beauty which occasioned her so much trouble. Diana granted her request and turned her face to a dull purple. Ianthia, however, soon regretted the loss of her beauty and was pining away with grief, when the goddess had pity on her and changed her into a flower, which still shrinks from Apollo (the sun) and hides her modest head in the shade.

At Regular Rates.

Miss Matilda Owens hung on the arm of the editor of the Laneville Eagle, to whom she had been engaged for three years, and endeavored to turn his gaze toward the sky.

"Just notice the moon, William!" she said in a melting voice.

"At the usual rates, Matilda, I shall be happy to do so," he replied.--Youth's Companion.

Too Strenuous.

"My son tells me you've discharged him," said the office boy's mother, "and I think that's strange. You advertised for a strong boy, and he's certainly--"

"He's too strong, madam," interrupted the employer. "In the single day he was here he broke all the rules of this office and some of the furniture."--Catholic Standard and Times.

Maj. Hemphill for Senator.

Three men are recognized leaders beyond others in the press of the South. They are Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier-Journal, Clark Howell of the Atlanta Constitution, and James C. Hemphill of the Charleston News and Courier. Col. Watterson has never held political office but has rather declined all propositions involving public station. Mr. Howell has been among the leading politicians and statesmen of Georgia both as editor of the newspaper first made famous by the unrivaled brilliancy of the late Henry Grady and as member of the legislature and presiding officer in turn in both branches of that body, and also as Lieutenant Governor.

Major Hemphill has followed until this time the example of Col. Watterson in abstaining from public office, but his friends have taken the business in their own hands and are making great progress in a campaign in his behalf for the seat in the United States Senate now held by Senator Latimer, whose term expires with the present congress in 1909. Of his eminent fitness for that great office there is no room for doubt. His work for twenty years as the directing mind and chief editorial writer of the News and Courier has been of so admirable a character in breadth of view, soundness of argument from his premises, and energy of statement, as to have made him the most influential man in his state for the welfare of South Carolina.

Major Hemphill has nature's gift of a superb personal presence and that rare finish of manner which has been characteristic for generations of the finest type of the Southern gentleman. He has added to the collegiate training of his youth the further advantages of continual contact with public men and close acquaintance with public affairs. He has acquired the wisdom of years while his eye is not dimmed nor his natural force abated. He will not resort to the pitchfork as a weapon of offense against the President to the lasting injury of the State--and her loss of influence which really belongs to her though represented by a senator opposed in politics to the national executive.

Most of the public business is done with small regard for political points. Reasonable men in the senate can do well for their States though not of the majority on party questions. If Major Hemphill is elected he will fill the position so ably and yet with such urbanity of temper and manner as to repeat the proud days of the Palmetto State and regain for it that degree of respect and power which the old commonwealth has justly enjoyed for generations.--Buffalo Evening News
