Robert E. Lee in His Home.

"From West Point Before the War," by Gen S W Ferguson, Fitzhugh Lee's room mate, in the April Metropolitan Magazine.

Soon afterward, Colonel Lee was relieved from duty at the Military Academy and took command of a regiment of cavalry of which he was made colonel. We were truly sorry when he left, for his almost perfect character could not fail to impress all who came in contact with him. I saw him but once after he left West Point. I will digress a little to tell of it. I was at home in Charleston on furlough during the winter of 1859, when I received from his son, William Henry Fitzhugh Lee, an invitation to be one of his groomsmen at his marriage to Miss Carter, at Shirley, on the James River. Most of the wedding party went together by steamer from Richmond two or three days before the ceremony and were all entertained in true Virginia style at the plantation mansion. The young men were lodged in several outbuildings. I had a rare opportunity of seeing the great soldier in his home life among relatives and friends. One thing which I noted particularly was his extreme modesty—I might almost say bashfulness. His older brother, Mr Carter Davis Lee, told a capital story, sang a good song and was the life of any party of which he happened to be a member. After dinner, when the cloth had been removed and the old Madeira brought on, the ladies did not retire, as the custom was, but remained to hear Mr Carter Lee's songs and stories. He would invariably toast the army and call upon Colonel Lee, the senior officer present, to respond, and everyone would repeat the call. The colonel would raise his glass of Madeira, bow to the company and take a sip of the wine, but never a toast would he give. I watched him closely, and upon my word he blushed like a girl, yet there was no one present but relatives, except a few young officers, who had been under him at West Point.

"A TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT."

Writer from Lake City So Styles Dispensary Muddle.

LAKE CITY, March 14.—It is learned from the members of the county board and of the county delegation, who are accessible to the reporter for the Times, that the stir in the county dispensary matters is likely to be nothing more than a tempest in a teapot, and that the board will come out all right.

From those seen, it seems that the charges against the board were made by Attorney Gilland, who was formerly the clerk, and who was dismissed, the board claims, because of a letter that they received from an Atlanta whiskey house, written them, it is claimed by Mr Gilland, asking what inducements could be offered him to have purchases made from that house. This letter was sent to the board, the whiskey house, so the Times man is told, replying that they could not make arrangements of the sort by mail, but that they must come in person to Atlanta. When Mr Gilland was discharged he went before the Williamsburg delegation in Columbia to prefer charges against the board, based on the same books that he so ably defended against the attacks of Attorney Stoll a short while before. The board had sent the letter of the Atlanta concern to Auditor West, who appeared with the delegation when Mr Gilland put in the charges, and he gave no explanation of it, at that time, the members of the delegation say.

The investigation was asked for and Inspector Haat was sent down. He has not yet reported. The board has asked that Mr West come, himself and he is expected in Kingstree today.

In the matter of the bonding company, the members of the board claim that the manager of the bonding company, being a relative of Mr Gilland, withdrew the bonds out of sympathy with him and his charges, and that new bonds have been procured and filed and the board continues to discharge their functions.

It is farther said on the part of the board, that charges made against them in Columbia were irregularities and overstocking, but they claim that when they inquired into the reason for so much whiskey being shipped to them they were told that it was ordered by their clerk. Other irregularities are alleged to be irregularities in the bookkeeping. The board invites investigation, and declare that they have not intentionally done anything that they ought not to have done and if they have they want to know it. They feel that they are right in spirit, even if they are wrong in some particulars in the letter and that charges made by their clerk after being dismissed from their service, based on his own books will not be likely to get them into very much trouble. —Florence Times.

Hot Supper at Heinemann.

The hot supper given at the beautiful residence of Mr W N Clarkson on Friday evening, March 13, to supply the Heinemann school with patent desks, was a grand success. Miss Clelia Keels, principal of the school, was manager of the dining room, where quite a delicious supper was served. Miss Boss Montgomery took charge of the oyster room, while Miss Mamie Keels presided over the beautiful fruit stand in the spacious hallway. Mr W M O'Bryan acted as cashier. The neat little sum of $38.00 was cleared. Greelyville, Gourdins, Foreston and Salters were well represented.
