WANT WILSON REMOVED.

Another Effort of Florence People to Get a White Postmaster.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The entire membership of the South Carolina delegation in congress called at the White House to-day and saw the president in regard to the situation at the Florence postoffice. J.E. Wilson, the present colored incumbent, has been the postmaster there for about sixteen years, and recently a movement was commenced by the citizens of Florence to have him removed. Several meetings of the people of that place have been held with this object in view. Representative Ellerbe was the spokesman for the party to-day and told the President among other things that Wilson is and for some time past has been incompetent to properly discharge the duties of the office.

He is quite an old man and is not able to give personal attention to the work of the office. The assistant postmaster and the clerks and employees in the office are young negroes, and the conduct of the office, because of Wilson's age and physical condition, has fallen on them. It is said that they are impudent, impolite and wanting in a high degree in courtesy and politeness. It was shown in addition to this that nearly 100 per cent of the patrons of the office, including both white and colored people, desire a change. Mr Ellerbe asked that some suitable person be named for the place, and that if it was not possible to do this now that the President would at least not make a recess appointment.

The president told the delegation that he would give the matter the most careful attention. The name of W.J. Stroud has been submitted for Wilson's place, and it is understood that his appointment would give entire satisfaction to the patrons of the office.—News & Courier.

Corn and Cash.

Corn in the crib is just like cash in the bank.

Most farmers who have corn at this season also have cash.

There are very few farmers who have cash and no corn.

The man who buys corn at this time has to send out of the country cash that would be very acceptable at home.

If York county should raise all the corn she needs, there would be a great deal more cash than there is, because, approximately speaking, every bushel of corn that comes here from the West pinches one dollar off of the local circulation.

All good business men have more or less appreciation of the extent to which corn is a money crop. It is only those who have less business capacity who hold that there is no money in corn.

It is very rarely the case that a farmer who makes enough corn to run him until the next crop gets into financial difficulty and it is almost as rare when a farmer who fails to make sufficient corn to run his place, gets to the next crop without troubles.—Yorkville Enquirer.

The Successful Man.

The successful man is the man who has made a happy home for his wife and children. No matter what he has not done in the way of achieving wealth and honor, if he has done that he is a success. If he hasn't done that, and it is his own fault, though he be the highest in the land, he is a most pitiable failure. How many men in a mad pursuit of gold, which characterizes the age, realize that there is no fortune which can be left to their families as great as the memory of a happy home—Ex.

Though a roll of college parchment

Is a thing to be despised,

And a graduate is happy

O'er the knowledge he's acquired;

Yet the gulf in earning power

He observes with some alarm

'Twixt the brain he brought from college

And a baseball expert's arm.

Jefferson Davis.

Let those who call him "traitor" read his farewell speech to the Senate, and they will stand mute. The accusation will die unuttered on their lips.

In that speech, a masterpiece of logic, and burning with the eloquence of sincerity and supreme conviction, Mr Davis said: "I well remember an occasion when Massachusetts was arraigned before the bar of the Senate, and when the doctrine of coercion was rife and to be applied against her because of the rescue of a fugitive slave in Boston. My opinion then was the same that it is now. Not in a spirit of egotism, but to show that I am not influenced in my opinion because the case is my own, I refer to that time and that occasion as containing the opinion which I then entertained, and on which my present conduct is based. I then said, if Massachusetts, following her through a strange line of conduct, chooses to take the last step which separates her from the Union, it is her right to go and I will neither vote one dollar or one man to coerce her back; but will say to her God-speed in memory of the kind association which once existed between her and the other States."

Whatever others may have thought of him—and strong in his own convictions of right and wrong, he respected the opinions of others who differed from him—to his own people, thinking as he thought, believing as he believed, he was and will always be the object of their devotion and undying love.

Others there were who came—not friends of the time when he was president. James Redpath, the fiery abolitionist, the man who wrote the "John Brown Invasion" and the "Life of John Brown," the man who had denounced Jefferson Davis, was entertained beneath that hospitable tree.

Walking beneath the giant oaks, strolling along the sandy beach, sitting upon the great wide veranda in the twilight, they came to know each other intimately and well, and there sprung up between them a friendship born of mutual respect, of lofty purpose and of noble minds. All was over then, the bitterness, the blood-shed, the fighting. Citizens of a reunited country, they could look back over the past with no bitterness, no regret. Each had done his duty as God had given him to see it. What may have been said between them in the days of that winter, no one will ever know; but their souls were gripped together, as it were, with hoops of steel. During that time Mr Redpath came to see that Jefferson Davis was a man among men, and after Mr Davis' death it was he who wrote for the Overland Magazine that superb eulogy on his life and character, entitled "Jefferson Davis Was Not a Traitor."—From "Beauvoir," by Saunders Wilburn, in Taylor Trolley Magazine for June.
