NIGHT HAWK'S REAL TROUBLE

Teamster Who Has Horse Fall While Streets Are Deserted Surely Deserving of Sympathy.

"Any teamster who thinks he has a hard time getting a horse on his feet that has fallen in the daytime has no right to complain," said the man who boards. "The fellow who has a right to do that is the driver whose horse falls in the dead of night. At 2 o'clock on a recent rainy morning I was awakened by the fall of a horse in front of our house. I got up and looked out. A dozen other people in the neighborhood did the same thing. The cabman saw us.

"You folks don't do any good up there!" he shouted. "Come down and help!"

"He needed help. The horse could not get a foothold on the slippery asphalt, and there was no one to help bolster him up. Ours is a quiet block, where nocturnal revelers are rare, and there was no one abroad to lend a hand. The horse pawed and slipped, the cabman tugged and pulled, but they made no headway. Finally another man and myself dressed and went to their assistance. It was all the three of us could do to get the horse up. And that gave me something new to think about. Of course, horses do fall at night, but I never thought about it before, nor what a difficult matter it is to get them up."

SHOWS GEOGRAPHY OF WORLD

Record of the Rocks Pointed to by Scientists to Prove Positions They Have Taken.

At a recent meeting of the Birmingham and Midland Institute Scientific society, A. W. Knapp gave a lecture on "The Earth's Record in the Rocks." The lecturer took each geological age in turn, and gave some idea of the life that existed at those times as shown in fossilized remains. He also showed how the geography of the world from age to age could be defined from the composition of the rocks. The limestone, he said, proved that the greater part of England was at one time under the sea, and by collecting evidence of this kind one was able to draw a map representing all the various periods of the world's development. The lecturer went on to show how the land rose and luxuriant vegetation grew, to be covered in turn by other deposits, leading to the formation of the coalfields. The earliest remains of man were toward the end of the ice age. Would, he asked, the people of today leave any remains? There would be the churchyards and the great cities like London, while the deposits in the Black country, which looked so much like volcanic dust, might mislead the scientists of some future age.

Occupations of College Men.

Occupations of college graduates in this country, as indicated by returns from 37 colleges and universities, covering the period from 1842 to 1900, have been studied by the federal bureau of education, and the data obtained has been analyzed by William B. Bailey of the economics faculty at Yale for the next issue of the Independent. Teaching, it appears, now attracts one-fourth of the graduates, a proportion much larger than that of any other profession, though it was engaged in by comparatively few down to 1825. Formerly most of the graduates became clergymen; at the close of the seventeenth century the ministry was chosen by about two-thirds of all the graduates. One hundred years later only about one-fifth adopted this profession, and by 1900 the ministry was receiving less than six per cent. Law drew to its service more graduates than any other profession at about 1800, but since then it has lost in relative importance, although the actual number of graduates entering this field has increased. Business claims an increasing proportion of graduates; at present nearly one-fifth enter commercial careers.—Columbia (S. C.) State.

Womanly Touch.

Adam was showing Eve through the cave.

"This is the living room," he said. "It is furnished as luxuriously as possible in these prehistoric days; I have spared no expense on it, and yet it lacks something or other, some final touch that I cannot name."

Eve took a swift look around. Then she pulled the magazine table out a little from the wall, gave the Morris chair a twist, laid a book on the window sill, and kicked the tiger-skin rug back a foot from the door.

"Wonderful!" cried Adam, and gazed open-mouthed at the magical transformation.

The cave was more than a cave now. It was a home.

There's no place like home.—Newark News.

Book Disinfection.

It has been charged against books that while they disseminate information and entertainment, they may at the same time be carriers of disease, and that public library books may scatter scarlet fever. The Journal of the American Medical Association gives as a practical method for general book disinfection a mixture—of course, this should be compounded by a capable chemist or pharmacist—of gas machine gasoline and two per cent. of phenol crystals. The books are to be immersed in this mixture for 20 minutes, removed and placed before an electric fan for two minutes and then set on end to dry for from 14 to 48 hours.

SHOWING VAGARIES OF FAME

How Rubinstein, at the Height of Eminence, Refused Offer That Meant Great Distinction.

Teresa Carreno, the eminent woman pianist, indulging in reminiscences of her career of fifty years before the public, tells a story of Tschalkowski and Rubinstein, which, in one respect, is illuminating.

Rubinstein, the great Russian master, composer and performer of his time, is seated in his study when Tschalkowski arrives and humbly asks permission to dedicate to the great man a concerto for piano and orchestra. Rubinstein examines the composition hastily; flies into a terrible rage; shakes his lionine head and asks the affrighted Tschalkowski how he dares to offer to dedicate this "trash" to a man of such eminence.

Thereupon, Tschalkowski leaves the house, and by chance, meeting the conductor Von Bulow, offers him the dedication, which is accepted.

Observe the mutations of time! Rubinstein was a great musician, a remarkable performer, but not a composer of the first rank by any means. Tschalkowski has sprung into the first rank of composers and is generally regarded by musicians as one of the greatest musical geniuses Russia has produced.

A dedication by him of one of his works is in itself title to unusual distinction, and will make for the perpetuation of any one's fame, while, as the years bring a lessening of memory of Rubinstein's wonderful playing, his reputation is bound to diminish.

Thus, even the pet of fortune and circumstances can afford to be courteous, for posterity often rewards courtesy and properly punishes overweening self-esteem.

TELLS OF BROTHER NOVELIST

Interesting Reminiscences Related by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle of George Meredith.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, speaking at the annual dinner in aid of the News-vendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution, gave some personal reminiscences of George Meredith.

In the year 1894-5 Sir Arthur visited the novelist at his residence at Box-hill, in Surrey. "When I went there I inadvertently offended him in one way. He met me at the door. He told me he had just come from the top of a high hill near the park. I expressed my amazement. He asked me why I was so surprised, and I said I thought he was an invalid. He said that would be the sort of compliment one would pay to an octogenarian.

"Subsequently a maid servant brought in a jelly or blanchmange, and Meredith, looking at the shivering lump, expressed himself in a characteristic phrase—just such a one as he would put in the mouth of one of his characters. He said, 'The jelly seems as treacherous as a Trojan horse.'

"Meredith was fond of a bottle of wine, but his state of health when I saw him forbade him taking any intoxicant. He had a bottle covered with cobwebs brought up for me, and asked if I could drink some. I said I did not think there would be any difficulty. I finished the bottle, and Meredith expressed his gratification, saying that on one occasion some one only drank one glass of a bottle he had opened and he had the mortification of seeing the rest of the contents wasted."—London Mail.

Instalment Plan.

The late Police Captain William H. Hodgkins, of New York, who died from cardiac strain that he brought on by reducing his weight over fifty pounds in three weeks, hated corpulence, and often regaled his friends with anecdotes that had corpulence for their butt.

"I went to a melodrama the other night," Captain Hodgkins said one afternoon to a police reporter. "The heroine was fat—fatter than myself.

"In the second act she fell overboard, and the hero, a little, scrawny chap, plunged after her, and seemed to be having a good deal of difficulty in swimming with her toward the yacht.

"As the hero splashed and struggled under his heavy burden a god yelled from the gallery:

"You'll never do it that way, bo! Save what you can now, and come back for the rest. Make three trips, if necessary."

When Murray Tackles Oedipus.

Classical scholars have not exactly complained, but have pointed out that when Prof. Gilbert Murray translates Euripides into English verse he slides that dramatist over his rough spots by doing mediocre Euripides into gorgeous and splendid Murray. It is better than Euripides, to be sure; but it isn't Euripides. There will be no difficulty of this kind in Professor Murray's newest task, the Oedipus Colonus. Murray at his murrayest will have all he can do to keep up to the sustained elevation of Sophocles. But there is hardly a living hand worthier of the task, and joy be the consequence.—Boston Transcript.

Asking Too Much.

A large shepherd dog owned by Dr. George W. Bowers was run over by an automobile on High street at 7:30 o'clock Wednesday evening and was killed. The occupants of the automobile stopped and returned to the scene, but the dog ran away.—Mobile Item.

You would scarcely expect it to remain and be killed a second time, would you?—Houston Post.

CENSUS STATISTICS FOR SOUTH CAROLINA.

State, representing 25.7 per cent of the total population 10 years of age and over, as compared with 35.9 per cent in 1900. The percentage of illiteracy is 38.7 among negroes, 10.3 among native whites and 6.8 among foreign-born whites. It is 10.5 for native whites of native parentage and 1.4 for native whites of foreign or mixed parentage.

Illiterates are relatively fewer in urban than in rural communities, the percentages being 15.6 and 27.7, respectively. The rural percentage exceeds the urban for each class of the population except the foreign-born whites, most of whom arrive in this country when past the school age. Among them the percentage of illiteracy is slightly higher in the urban population than in the rural.

For persons from 10 to 20 years of age, inclusive, whose literacy depends largely upon present school facilities and school attendance, the percentage of illiteracy is 19.1.

MARITAL CONDITIONS.

In the population 15 years of age and over, 35.5 per cent of the males and 29 per cent of the females are single. The percentage married is 59.7 for males and 58.4 for females and the percentage widowed 4.4 and 12.1, respectively. Although the law granting divorces in South Carolina was repealed in 1878, the number reported in 1910 as divorced is believed to be too small, because of the probability that a number of divorced persons class themselves as single or widowed.

That the percentage is smaller for women than for men is due largely to the fact that women marry younger. Thus 17.4 per cent of the females from 15 to 19 years of age are married, as compared with 3.1 per cent of the males, and 60.5 per cent of the females from 20 to 24 years are married, as compared with 41.6 per cent of the males. In the next age group, 25 to 34 years, the difference largely disappears, and among those in the next two age groups the percentage married is higher among the males. That there is a larger proportion of widows than of widowers may indicate that men more often remarry than women, but since husbands are generally older than their wives, the marriage relationship is more often broken by death of the husband than by death of the wife.

For the main elements of the population the percentages of married persons among those 15 years of age and over are as follows: Foreign-born whites, 58 for males and 59 for females; native whites of native parentage, 58.3 and 59.5, respectively; native whites of foreign or mixed parentage, 51.6 and 46; negroes, 61.1 and 57.8.

These percentages by no means indicate the relative tendency of the several classes as regards marriage. To determine that, the comparisons should be made by age periods, since the proportion married in any class is determined largely by the proportion who have reached the marrying age. Similarly, the proportion widowed depends largely on the proportion past middle life. The percentage married, both for males and for females, is higher in rural than in urban communities.

The total number of dwellings in South Carolina is 302,842, and the total number of families 315,204, indicating that in comparatively few cases does more than one family occupy a dwelling. The average number of persons per dwelling is 5, and the average number per family, 4.8.
