US NAVY TO GET SHELLS FROM BRITISH

CONTRACT TO BE AWARDED ABROAD UNLESS AMERICANS REDUCE BIDS

Washington, Jan 6.—Unless American manufacturers consent to largely reduce their bids for furnishing the United States navy with 16-inch and 14-inch armor piercing projectiles, contracts will be awarded Hadfield & Sons Company, Limited, of Sheffield, England, which submitted unusually low bids and offered to deliver the shells in one-half of the time guaranteed by American competitors. Hadfields bid $237 lower on each 16-inch shell and $144 lower on each 14-inch shell than any American manufacturer.

Officials of the Navy Department and naval officers expressed no concern to-day over the possibility of criticism if the contracts are awarded to the English bidder. In any event it is believed the English concern will be awarded contracts for some shells of both sizes.

Up-to-date Hadfield has furnished the navy with 600 shells. Of these, 100 were test projectiles for 14-inch guns, and 500 were 12-inch projectiles. According to ordnance experts of the navy "these projectiles were of a very high class and satisfactory to the navy in every way.

It was a bid by the English manufacturers that pulled down prices for projectiles in January, 1914. In 1912 the cost of 14-inch projectiles furnished to the navy by American manufacturers was $490 apiece. In January, 1914, 14-inch shells were produced at $315 each. This drop followed a bid by Hadfields, which was away below the figure set by American competitors.
