SECRECY IN JAPAN.

Visitors to Factories Are Politely Allowed to Remain Outside.

It is as hard to get into a Japanese factory as it is to break out of jail. It can be done if the proper amount of red tape is unwound, but the tradition is that visitors are welcome—to stay outside. That is a specimen of Japanese politeness. The seeker for information is welcome to do what he has no desire to do and welcome to argue and fume as much as he wants to in doing it, but he does it in the end. The Japanese have reached the point of believing that the wages of sin is publicity, and either to protect valuable secrets, which other nations discovered first or to prevent foreigners from exposing oppressive working conditions, the entrances are barred and a "no admission" sign is as literal and true as a "no fishing" sign would be if hung over the babies' bathtub.

Accompanied by a friend who knows the ceremonial forms and fortified with a pocketful of beautifully engraved cards, I approached the offices of the Fuji spinning mills. We both received several low bows, for which we had no market and which necessitated unaccustomed gymnastics on our part. We were then shown the reception table. Hustling the east is useless. As we chatted we watched the clerks work as industriously as Japanese clerks do. A Japanese student tries hard to pass his examinations and become a graduate so that he can take life easy and draw small pay for the rest of his life.

The man I watched did not do one stroke of useful labor in the quarter hour we were there. He smoked two cigarettes, played with his counting board and put on his coat, but otherwise he did no productive labor. His companions did the same type of work. An American would not pay 10 cents a month for all they did while we were there.

The chief official returned after some time to say that he was sorry. When a Japanese is sorry for you it is time for you to sympathize with yourself. He explained that the brother of the manager had brought down a correspondent of the London Times and that they had to refuse him admission because he did not have a letter from the manager himself. As I am not a citizen of a world ruling nation I took my turn down very gracefully, and executing another Beaucairean how we withdrew.—Christian Herald.

Instincts That Lead to Death.

Professor Mivart proved that there are "instincts" that lead to death by failing to adapt themselves to a change of circumstances. Migratory quail by thousands perish in the deserts of northern Africa, where their ancestors used to find a comfortable winter resort, abounding with forests and even with grain fields, if we shall credit Pliny's account of the Numidian coast lands. The forests are gone, but myriads of quail still follow in the same route at the risk of starvation.

Had the Net Ready.

At Vassar they do not allow the young ladies to drive out with the men unless there is a near relationship between them or unless there is an engagement on the boards. A Vassar daisy asked permission to take a drive with a young man. "Is he your father, brother or cousin?" "No, ma'am." "Are you engaged to him?" "No, ma'am"—and here the crimson rushed from her neck and cuddled up among her bangs—"but I expect to be before we get back."—Exchange.

Law of Falling Bodies.

All falling bodies, whether they be crystal raindrops or meteorites, fall with what philosophers term "a uniform accelerated motion." In other words, if a body be moving at a certain velocity at the expiration of one second from the beginning of its fall it will be moving with twice that velocity at the expiration of two seconds, gaining in speed at a uniform rate throughout the course of its fall.

The Cause of the Trouble.

"What is the matter with that baby?" growled an irascible husband as the little one persisted in howling and kicking to the extent of his little might. "The matter is, sir," calmly replied the wife as she strode up and down the room—"the matter is that this baby inherits your temper." And the husband returned to his paper with a gloomier look than before.—Exchange.

A Grim Superstition.

A curious superstition prevails in Morocco. If a man has a grudge against another he procures some human bones and grinds them into fine flour which he mixes with his enemy's bread or other food. It is universally believed that the man who eats this horrible compound will begin to fade away and eventually die.

THE FAMILY LAWYER.

Killed by "Specialization" He Is Now Extinct In New York.

The old fashioned lawyer—the family lawyer, who was guide, philosopher and friend, who had charge of the family estate, presided over all testaments and documents, was asked for advice about investments, consulted about the school and the college to which the boy or girl should be started on his career, was looked to by anxious parents for a grave opinion as to the moral, financial and social status of the young man who had sought the hand of the daughter of the house, was the honored guest at all family functions—does not exist in New York any more.

He has become extinct like the dodo. The pressure of business duties and the increasing hustle and bustle of legal life have crowded out his social functions. It is now the function of the lawyer to keep his client out instead of getting him out of court.

There is also considerable tendency toward specializing and consolidation. Four or five lawyers take a suit of offices together and enter into a sort of partnership. One specializes on torts, another on contract cases, another on constitutional cases, carriers, corporations and other branches. Another case of "specialization" is the "business getting" lawyer, who knows practically no law but obtains clients. He belongs to clubs and fraternities, travels a great deal and is seen little in the office. He is, first of all, what is called "a good mixer." In several firms the "business getting" lawyer knows practically no law and simply makes a success on his manners. He does none of the real legal work. After the client is obtained "the business getter," after putting in some general questions about the case, remarks:

"I'll turn you over to our Mr. Blank, who attends to many of the details for me."

Mr. Blank of course will handle the case, and the "business getter" will not bother his head any further about it.—New York Cor. Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Telling the Bumps.

The antiquity of palmistry is in striking contrast to the modernity of "telling the bumps," with which it is often associated in popular estimation. Wrongly associated, since the phrenologist merely reads character without attempting any predictions of the future. Phrenology was invented by Gall, the German physician, who as a boy had studied the heads of his schoolfellows. Gall gave his first lecture in 1796, but six years later his teaching was prohibited by the Austrian government. Phrenological societies were soon formed in London, and the science, after being "refuted" by Lord Jeffrey and others, gradually made headway.—London Chronicle.

Courtship In Holland.

The etiquette of Holland is exceedingly strict in all classes. The young girl is most carefully chaperoned, and she never goes anywhere, even to church, unless accompanied by her parents, some male relative or other equally trusted attendant. At a dance the parents sit round the walls sipping their coffee or wine, and the young men must make the best of their chances in the opportunities afforded by the dance, for when it pleases the guardians to depart there is no help for it, but the girls must go too.

Habit of Saving.

It takes a strong character to form the habit of saving money from a small income, yet it can be done. No man ever regrets having formed the habit of saving, though many regret that they never did form the habit. "If I only had!" is the sad wail that is heard from many lips, while the words, "I am glad that I did," are rarely heard in this day of extravagance, outside show and exaltation of the things that are fashion for the hour and soon pass away.

Airplane Plant Seeds.

The condurango plant in Peru produces a seed pod from five to eight inches long, filled with seeds which are small aeroplanes in construction. The seed proper is an oval one, about the size of a small split pea. The planes extend from the seed like the wings of a butterfly or aeroplane. When the pod bursts hundreds of these seeds will sail off on a gentle breeze anywhere from 100 yards to half a mile.

His Standard.

"I get tired of hearing about the 'good old times,'" said the weary modernist. "What's the use of assuming that people aren't in reality as well off as they ever were?" "Well," replied the man who talks about palmy days, "maybe you're right. But you must admit that we used to get a whole lot more peanuts for a nickel than we do now."—Washington Star.
