tyranny for which ancient wisdom had no solution. Our own United States has been above all others the land where the races of every clime might meet unhindered by the jarring ambition of historic nationality. The symbol of that whole revelation is our flag borne by our soldiers through French streets in the parades of July 14, the anniversary of the fall of the Bastille. The foe is the old one; the doctrine that some nations and classes must rule others by the sword. Against that enslaving creed, as upheld by Prussia's legions, the new world has set its strength. Voices are raised in Germany that seem to show realization of this, voices declaring that Germany cannot stand alone against the tide of democracy that now flows strong even through what was the Russian Empire. The world turns to a new order in which there shall be scope for the best that all men can do. There are wrongs to be righted, evils to be atoned, but, more than these, there is this vision of a just policy for all mankind, and it is for those who can see that vision to bend their every energy to its triumph. That is what the Stars and Stripes means as it floats in Frahce in this year of grace 1917.—Collier's Weekly.

Somewhere in France.

When Rochambeau's gallant troops came ashore at Newport to help the American colonists win independence from their mother diseases, it was to write one more page in a chapter of history that goes back to Troy and Carthage. But when "Black Jack" Pershing strode down the gangplank at Boulogne to take command of our country's armed forces in France, a new volume was opened, a volume that may conceivably close with nothing less than the federation of the world. Our age has long been perfecting the means by which human unity can be maintained. Steam and electricity are the conquerors of estranging space and sundering time. The men of the eighteenth century had already shown how education, justice and liberty can answer that dreary riddle of ignorance ruled by
