A CIRCUS CUPID

By GRACE SCOTT.

(Copyright, 1918, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Betty Harlequin uttered a little cry of childish delight. A circus had come to town. She stood before the big, gaudy poster for a long time studying the ludicrous features of the clowns. Then, with a lingering glance, she went on her way to the office. Betty loved circuses. Every time they came to town she was sure to go. Even now she held her breath when the beautiful painted ladies walked the tight rope or perched on tiptoe on the big white stallions.

When she reached home that night she told her family, which consisted of an older sister and her mother, the wonderful news. The elder sister laughed at her sister's childishness, but the little mother only smiled knowingly and said she might go if she were home early. Betty promised, and was soon seated in the car on the way to the circus. Already the tent was ablaze with lights, and the brass band was sending forth a welcome to the people. She took her place at the end of the long line at the ticket booth and chatted with some small boys. Soon she was in the big tent, watching with eager eyes the stunts in the ring. She laughed merrily at the clowns and clapped wildly at the strong man. After a while she walked down by the animal cages and was enjoying herself hugely, when suddenly the long arm of a monkey shot out between the bars of his cage and grasped firmly the crown of Betty's best hat. She gave a little cry of mingled pain and terror and tried in vain to wrench herself free. It was then that a tall figure in khaki came to her rescue, and with a little difficulty managed to get her free, but the monkey had pulled the crown from the rim of the hat, leaving only the rim on her head.

He bounded away in his cage with the crown and the flowers, and plucked at them in high glee. Betty's hair had received a vigorous pull, and clasping her hands to her tortured head she gazed at her rescuer, the tall soldier. That young man's face was trying in vain to keep sober, and at length Betty laughed, too. "Oh, I say," cried the soldier, when his mirth had subsided, "that was a shame!"

"Yes, my poor hat!" mourned Betty, gazing ruefully at the remains of a once pretty hat. "Whatever shall I wear home?" Then, just because they were both young, they laughed merrily, and continued to see the animals. "Oh, dear, I must hurry home. It is quite late." They parted at the car station, and all the young soldier knew about his charming companion was that her name was Betty. That young lady had discovered that his name was Stephen—Steve for short. She boarded the car and kept her face turned toward the window, for her cheeks were burning with the consciousness that she had no hat on her tousled curly hair. Her mother was awake when she reached home, and Betty sat by her side and told her of the evening's adventure, and the little mother shook her head over her daughter's escapade. "My dear, you had better run along to bed now," she said, when Betty's narrative had ended. "Oh, I forgot to tell you, dear," she added, "that Emma called up and wants you to go down to her camp by the seashore tomorrow afternoon and stay Sunday. You may go if you want to, dearie, for the change will do you good."

"Oh, mumsie," cried the delighted Betty, "you are the dearest little mother in the world." Then, with a fond good-night kiss, she went to bed.

The next morning she rose early and packed her grip. As she carefully laid her pretty bathing suit in, her cheeks glowed with pleasant anticipation of the fun in the water. When she reached the camp she found her dear friend, Emma Worthington, waiting for her. In the cozy dining room overlooking the sea a table was set for four. "Why, Emma," asked Betty, who else is to be here?"

"Well," replied Emma, "my old friends, the Burtons, are home on a furlough and I invited them over."

"Who are the Burtons?" asked Betty, interestedly.

"Two delightful young men that have had a summer camp here for four years. One is a sailor and the other is a soldier in the training school. They are very nice chaps and I know you will like them."

At this news Betty hastened to her room to change her dress and to smooth her hair. When she again entered the dining room the young men had arrived. She gave a little cry of surprise, for the soldier boy was her knight of the evening before. "Oh, I am glad to see you again," she cried, and told her friend about the mischievous monkey. That was the beginning of a short but very pleasant holiday, and when Steve and Betty parted again he had her promise to write to him. She kept that promise, and when he again came home for a short visit before leaving for France he asked her to go to the park for a walk. Betty knew by the twinkle in his nice blue eyes that he had something up his sleeve and so she consented to go. They reached the zoo and paused by the monkeys' cage. Steve glanced around to see if they were alone and then took Betty's hand in his. "Girly, I don't just know how to say it, but you know what I'm driving at. Will you?" And there, with the match-making monkeys for witnesses, Betty promised that she would be waiting for him when her soldier boy came home, again.
