The Children and the Temperance Reform.

The children of to-day will be the Courier sends that paper the following. men and women of the future. The Federal expenditures in South Carolina legislators, teachers, preachers, business men of the future are now in their cradles or attending the primary school. If it be true that, "The hand that rocks the cradle, rules the world," the world-rulers of the future are now taking their first lessons in preparing for their responsible positions. The controllers of the Nation's destiny and the guardians of her weal in 1910, are now under process of training. What will be their attidude towards the temperance reform? That will largely depend upon their present instructors. Let the children of today be pledged to total abstainence, and thoroughly indoctrinated with the principles of prohibition, and in twen-

v-five years drunkenness will have disappeared from the country. Our hope is in the children; and yet we have not begun to see the importance of earnest and constant effort in that direction. Thousands of old topers are gone past hope of recovery. Thousands more are so bound by the ties of inveterate habit, that they will only be saved by the skin of their teeth. The labor expended in the rescue of one inebriate, would, if rightly directed, prevent one hundred children from taking the first step towards such degradation. Prevention is better than cure. By all means save those who are nearing the rapids; but let us redouble our energies to prevent others from getting into the stream. A child, tee-total from the start, will wield a life-long influence on the side of sobriety, and not a single soul will go down to a Samuel Johnson was once asked the drunkard's doom, by his example. moderate drinker, though he may be-

As it taxes one's ingenuity to amuse and pacify these little patients, I will mention two or three things I did for my boy when he was recovering from diphtheria, hoping the experience may be of use to some other mother. Of course, I soon exhausted stories, and the mild play with such toys as weak kittle hands can manage, and the old cry of "Oh mamma, what can I do?" set in again.

The walls of the sick room were of bare plaster—as all sick-room walls should be, for a coat of lime makes them all fresh and pure againand when my weary child sighed, among his many sighs, for "something new in the room to look at, I bethought me of a roll of pictures saved from a year's number of a London illustrated after being abandoned to die by other physinewspaper. These I brought into the cians. It will be mailed free to any address newspaper. These I brought into the sick-room and pinned all about the walls. The effect was very enlivening. The room seemed suddenly enlargedas if it all at once opened out upon all the quarters of the globe. There were broad landscapes and wild marine scenes, battle fields, Christmas firesides, noble portraits of horses and dogs, brave generals and fair women, pretty groups of children, and tumbling waterfalls. The small invalid was delighted. Then I brought him a long, light stick-a piece of inch moulding, it happened to be-with which he could point at the different pictures while he asked as many questions as he liked. This stick was an inspiration. It was like having arms six feet long, and the boy had great fun "visiting all around the world" with it, as he expressed it.
