Mr Editor: Perhaps a few thoughts and a little information in regard to crops from this quiet community, may be of interest to amount of planting and replanting of cotton, we have secured a stand; and a few million stalks to spare; in some places the cotton is up all over the land, and it is hard to distinguished the rows. This shows what an industrious people we are-never stopping for worms, cool nights, high winds, nor drought, we kept scattering the seed and stirring the vest will not fail, so long as we do our part. The early rains have come in copious showers (though somewhat late) and now we are bending all of our energies to have all crops ready to receive the "latter rains" in due

It is remarkable how fine the few stalks of cotton are that came up by the first of May; and the corn crop, also, seemed to flourish during the drought. It is small but of good color and in healthy condition; deeply rooted: and if properly cultivated during the next ten days, I think will yield a fine crop. In my humble opinion, more rests with the the corn erops will be. The farmer who works judiciously, will be very apt to make corn enough and some to sell. Some of the farmers are laying by the corn, planting cotton, upon which to base an estimate; and week or ten days of excessive rain, followed has but five or six weeks; for, I consider that corn which is three feet high now, with no grass and weeds in it, and a good stand of cow peas on the land, is practically made.
