THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

It is difficult for any one to determine at this point of time, what will be the effect of the action of the late Convention on the Democracy of the State. All the leading papers and politicians appear to be equally at sea on the subject. We publish in another column two editorials from the Greenville News which present the conservative view, so to speak, of the situation, and may fairly be taken to represent that view. The Tillman papers, representing one extreme, justify and approve of the course taken by the Convention. This was to be expected, of course. A majority of the anti-Tillman papers criticise with more or less severity the action of the majority of the Convention. Both sides are apparently beating the air uncertainly, not knowing what to think cr what to advise.

In our opinion, the adoption of a new constitution for the party, and the election of a new Executive Committee, did not come within the purview of the Convention's powers. Called for one and only one specific purpose, it transcended its powers when it undertook to do something besides what it was called for. To permit any other construction to be placed on such a call, would be to open wide the door to any and all surprises and achemes which the crafty or unscrupalous might choose to spring upon such a body. Our strongest objection to such action is that it is decidedly and obnoxiously undemocratic. It may, sometimes, accord with the will of the people at large. At other times it is certain to contravene that will. In such a case, the question arises, Are the people bound by such action? They may choose to ratify and confirm it, in some cases, but since it is a poor rule that does not work both ways, it must be conceded that if it be wrong in one instance it must also be wrong in both. Hence, to attempt to anticipate, fores'all and bind the people by action not contemplated when they elected their representatives, is subversive of all Democratic methods and precedents. When the Charleston World prints at the head of its columns the dictum of Capt. Dawson as to the power of the Convention of 1880, it insincerely and disingenuously suppresses the fact that the scope of the Convention's call embraced not only one primary purpose, but, also "such other business as the Convention may deem proper." The ed by the World, must be construed in the same light, for he spoke the words with reference to the same Convention of 1880, and had the call before him as he spoke. It is indeed a melancholy poses, suppress such parts of the truth 21st inst., at 8 o'clock P. Brayton has called a Republican Convention to meet in Columbia Sept. 17th to elect an Executive Committee, and to transact such other business as may be deemed advisable. Is it not plain, that if they shall then see that the Democracy is hopelessly divided, they will nominate and run a State ticket. The Register says not, but its decision is based on a very slender republican party is in favor of the idea that if they shall see a chance to win, won't cost the third of it. I'll bet any they will make the effort. Convention Comments.

Greenville News, August 15. It might have been a good deal better; but it might have been a great deal worse. Yet we can from his position by bluster or driven from it not see where they took unfair advantages, or into folly and wrong by the loud and denied the opposition any rights or did anyempty talk of the reckless or foolish. thing to injure the State.

They were not entirely considerate, but consideration for the minority is rarely an element in practical politics and we think the conduct of the anti-Tillman delegates indicated that if they had had the power they would have used it with more severity than was used against them.

The convention had the right to elect its emporary chairman. The custom has been otherwise because there has not heretofore been a faction fight in the party. We can not blame the majority for using the power and right it had and refusing to take chances. Circumstances might have developed to give the temporary chairman large and important

By declining to nominate a State ticket or to attempt such nomination the convention proved its good sense, moderation and conservatism. The same qualities and proper consideration for the good name and welfare of the State are manifested in the resolutions concerning the State debt. Legally it is a question whether the convention had the right to elect a new Executive Committee and form a new constitution. The new constitution is in one or two provisions a partisan document. The provis ion against the organization of new clubs, for instance, is unfair to the anti-Tillman side; so is the provision that in the cities there can only be two clubs for each polling place. Under this Greenville, for instance, with 1,200 Democratic voters can have but four clubs while a township with 300 voters may have six. This is one of the few blemishes to the convention's work. Perhaps if the anti-Tillman men had remained in the convention they could have secured a change or modification in these matters. The convention does not give us reason to think any better than we did before of Tillman and some of his chief supporters; but it confirms the belief we have held all along that the rank and file is all right. The great body of the men who are supporting Tillman are just, patriotic and conservative and may be trusted to act fairly and discreetly and to much of a lawyer, but we don't expect refuse to follow any reckless or evil leader-

The Situation as It Is.

Greenville News, August 16. There is much doubt and confusion in the public mind regarding the present political situation in this State, arising from the widey differing statements of purpose and opinion and "boodle" Assistant Postmaster General coming from those supposed to know what Clarkson, who has an unlimited supply of they are talking about and from the unusual the former, is to become the boss dog of the methods and proceedings of the factions. If that convention confirms the new constitution and the new Executive Committee both will stand beyond dispute

In our judgment the action of the majority of the convention in forcing the new constitution and the new Executive Committee was an unnecessary and unwise use of its power, and the action of the minority in withdrawing was useless, dangerous and unnecessary. That action of the minority, with its purpose left in doubt two days, gave the impression that there was a split, injured the State and seriously weakened the opposition to Tillman. All that is done, however, and there is no use paper or Kalsomine. in crying over spilt milk. What we have to do is to look to the future and guard the State and party against dangers which may result during the next four weeks from the situation as it stands.
