WOMEN IN GOVERNMENT OFFICES,

in His Department in 1861. The death of General Spinner gave rise to the suggestion that the women of the country should erect a monument to his mencey, and for the reason that to him is the credit due of first giving employment to women in the treasury department. General Spinner died with many claims to the public gratitude, but he did not originate the practice of employing women as clerks in the departments. The first appointee was Miss R. I. Wilson. She was appointed by Secretary Chase, Sept. 15, 1861, upon his own motion, and assigned to duty in that branch of the treasury which is known as "the secretary's office." The second appointment, of Miss H. C. Kellar, was made April 4, 1862. She was assigned to duty in the secretary's office, but in the month of October, 1862, she was transferred to the treasurer's bareau, and at the same time two additional appointpointments were made by the secretary, and the appointees were assigned to duty under the treasurer.

In the years 1801-2-3 there were only twelve women appointed in the treasury department. Of these one was in the secretary's office, five, including one transferred, were in the treasury, four were in the register's bureau, and two were in the internal revenue office. All these appointments were made by Secretary Chase; but two of them, one of April 4, 1862, and one of July 16, 1863, were supported by the recommendation of General Spinner.

As the appointments were made by Secretary Chase, and as the first one, which ante dates the second by thirteen months, was made upon his own motion and as he then had the power to exclude women altogether, the chief credit would seem to be due to him. It is a tradition of the department, factory than a dress only half put together. supported, indeed, by the knowledge of There are no linings in market that stretch many persons, that General Spinner was an so little that a well fitted dress stays in early and earnest advocate of the new policy, but it is also true that the twe " comen employed in the years named go. a such proofs of intelligence, fidelity and enpacity that the exclusion of the sex be-

In all the various duties imposed upon them they have shown adequate capacity, and in faithfulness they are not inferior to the men who are engaged in similar services. It may be assumed that each year will enlarge the sphere of their labors and add to their compensation, which, speaking generally, is not equal to the pay of men engaged in corresponding work.—Geo. S. Boutwell in Boston Globe.

Making Water Drops Jump. If we let a drop of water fall on a leaf of paper it will spread out in a large circle, and we then say that the water soaks into the paper. But if we have oiled this paper or plastered it with lampblack or some other substance into which water does not soak, the drops will roll over the paper like a ball, slightly flattened. Use is made of this peculiarity in the trick which is described herewith. . Take a strip of paper pretty strong in verised chalk; shake well and rinse in cold texture a triffe wider than four inches and water.
