Lintless Cotton Seed.

Manager Cureton, of the Greenville cotton seed oil mill, is experimenting with the lintless cotton of H. T. Ferguson, living near Woodruff, in Spartanburg County, twenty six piles east of this city.

The object of Mr. Cureton's experiinfa is to find what value the seed as as an oil producer and as a ferti-

A News reporter yesterday saw everal stalks of the cotton at the oilmill. They were not unlike the ordiference can be seen in the green bolls antil they are opened. Then the observer is astonished. He sees nothing but a boil full of green seed such as he would find on opening a pea

The merest trace of lint is found. The stalks in the posession of Mr. Cureton contain one or two open bolls, and when a close inspection is made there is again surprise. The seeds stick in the bolls until they are well matured and if not picked drop out. When ripe they are intensely black in color and resemble the seed of the famous Peterkin cotton. They are larger than the ordinary seed.

Mr. Gateton has not full completed his experiments, but he has made a few simple tests. He says the seed island of Jamaica that it threatens to has much more oil than the ordinary exterminate the entire population. seed and far more meal. He believes the cotton can be easily cultivated by a decided vote, a bill fixing the and will yield from 300 to 400 bushels on the acre. He believes, from Tennyson has written a three act what he now sees, that there is a comedy, which will be preduced in great future for the cotton as an oil New York this winter for the first producer and fertilizer maker.

The seed are gathered much like peas and the cotton is harvested much like other cotton. Mr. Ferguson has an acre in cultivation this year.

The following are the claims made for the cotton in a circular sent out by Mr. Ferguson:

"Ferguson's lintless cotton is the grandest discovery of the age. For four years I have been experimenting with this cotton seed. It comes true to name every time. It is one of the most abundant bearers ever seen in cotton and will resist a drouth ten or fifteen days longer than other cotton Stalks bear from 100 to 400 bolls packed full of seed, numbering from twenty to sixty seed in each boll. They contain more oil and more plant food than other cotton seed and will cultivated as other cotton. Sowed Sixty cents a year is what Edison broadcast as peas for fertilizing purlets will be the cost of heating and poses up to the 10th of dame, will The cotton grows tall, putting out from six to eight long running limbs near the bottom of the stalk. They resemble potato vines. Each of these limbs will mature from eight to twenty bolls, besides the short limbs and brace limbs common in other cotton. "For stock it is superior to all others. Chickens, turkeys and ducks devour the seed when in the reasting ear state as eagerly as they do corn. Stock of all kinds eat them."- Greenville News. Happy Hoosiers. Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville. Ind. writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that
