I would not change my joys for those Of emperors and kings. What has my gentle friend, the rose, Told them, if eaght, do you suppose— The rose that tells me things?

What eccrete have they had with trees What romps with gracer spears? What know they of the mysterics Of butterfiles and honey been, Who whisper to my ears?

What says the sunbeam unto them?
What takes have brooklets told?
In there within their dialers A single rival to the gen The dewy daisies hold?

What sympathy have they with birds. Whose songs are songs of mine?
By they e'er hear, se though in words
Thus lisped, the message of the herds
Of grazing, lowling kine?

Ah, no! Give me no lofty throne. But just what Nature yielda. Let me but wander on, slone If need be, so that all my own
Are woods and delee and fields.

Parrots a Bource of Piensuc There was a time when parrots were regarded in India and elsewhere as secred, and saybody who dered to tojure one of them was regarded as guilty of a dreadful crime. It is true that since then they have fallen somewhat from their trigs estate, and that in this more degenerate age the common Ama-ton parrot has been shot in great numbers in the eastern parts of Brazil for the prosaic purpose of making a particuler kind of soup to which the natives are partial, while the naturalist waxes quite eloquent when he sounds the praises of parakeet pie. But in our own country, though we do not go either to the one extreme of holding them sacred or to the other extreme of putting them into pies, parrots still occupy a place of honor in our households, and a well behaved "pretty Poll," who has been duly instructed in the accomplishments of her kind, is still the source of as great a degree of pleasure as ever.—Strand Magazine.

Why He Could Not Attend. An amusing instance of the expedients resorted to by men summoned to attend as common jurymen in order to avoid serving in that capacity occurred recently. One morning a little girl whose eyes just peered above the desk timidly exclaimed: "Please sir, father can't come; he can't parent. She hesitated. Evidently she had not been instructed further than the statement she had made, and looking straight into the judge's eyes said:

"Well, sir, futher don't wear boots: he's got wooden legs. I wasn't told to say anything else, sir: that's all."-London Tit-Bits. The Street Band's Delight. One of the delicate delights of the street band is its propensity to scent out household musicales. In nothing, apparently, do these wandering musicians so much delight as to spring into blatant strains before the house from which issues the voice of song or the modest music of the planoforte. They carry the day or rather the night every time: for while they can play through and over and above anything, it would take self possessed and steady nerved house-hold performer to hold his own or her own against such rivalry. And then they ring the bell and extend the hat!-Boston Commonwealth.

The Names of Two Cities. On the principle of "In Rome do as the Romans do," I think it a safe rule to pronounce the name of a place as the residents of that place do. Hence we should speak of St. Louis as though it were written "St. Lewis," not "St. Louis," but "St. Louis," All good Missourings say "St. Lowis. It is a little difficult to put down in black and white the local prosunciation of New Orleans, but it is something like this, "New Awlyins," with the strong accent on the "Awl."-Cor. A Live Snake in a Woman's Arm. There lives, or did quite recently, near Columbia, S. C., a woman afflicted in a manner that makes one's flesh creep to think of it. For more than the third of a century she has carried a live snake under the skin of one of her arms. How the reptile first found lodgment in its queer situation is as much of a puzzle to the eld lady as it is to the hundreds who have visited her for the purpose of viewing the long welt where the unwelcome creature lies encysted. -When the lady first noticed the bow shaped ridge on her arm it was of about the diameter of a pin, and less than two inches in length. During the many years that it has safely nestled in her flesh it has grown from a mere thread to a snake a foot long and as large as a lead pencil. The eyes of the creature are plainly visible through the skin, and the scales can be felt by rubbing the finger along the welt formed by its body. Physicians pronounce it a most remarkable freak, and have endeavored, without success, to prevail upon the old lady to have it removed.—Philadelphia PORTRAITS OF COLUMBUS.

The public school pupils, who are going to have the lead all over America in the celebration of the 400th annivertary of the discovery of America by Columbus, are already asking how Co

Many leading American publications have recently contained timely articles on the great discoverer, and the variety of portraits which has accompanied these articles has been surprising.

By the highest authorities it is conceded that there is no likeness of Columbus whose claim to consideration is in-

From Oviedo and his own son Ferdinand-two persons who knew him-we have descriptions of his appearance, upon which must be based our judgment of the alleged portraits.

From them we learn that his face was long, neither full nor thin; his cheek boxes rather high; his nose aquithirty his hair was of light color, but became rapidly gray after that age. It must be admitted in the face of these details that not one of the portraits gives great discoverer as he lived.

The carliest claimant for considera-Goe is a wood engraving by Paolo Giovio, published in 1375, which we Next in point of antiquity is the ca graving called the De Bry portrait. It shows a head covered by a three cornered cap, the face being short and broad and having the characteristics of the Dutch in a marked degree. It does not correspond with the best authenticated descriptions. De Bry claimed that the original canvas from which it beginning, bore with a tender compas-The judge asked the nervous little was taken was painted from life by sion to look upon our struggles, our order of Ferdinand, the king.

Jomard published in 1845 a portrait in support of a Titianesque canvas, which he had obtained at Vicenza. This picture bore the inscription "Christophorus Columbus." He claimed that the features were in accord with the description of writers contemporaneous with Columbus. The pointed beard and Flemish ruff he accounted for by assuming that they were the additions of a later hand. These and other accessories, however, prevented the acceptance of

There are many other so called likenesses of Columbus. They are widely scattered and it is not easy to link them with the three shown above, which probably have the best claims to considerstion. But these three have little in common. They would never be taken for portraits of the same person.

The most authoritative descriptions of the stature, complexion and personality of Columbus coincide, and yet the most generally accepted portraits are not in harmony. Many artists disregard the statement that his nose was aquiline and make it of a decidedly retrouse type; others portray him as a brunette with a short, fat and beardless face. The next time we see him he is a blond with a long, thin face, well covered with whiskers. We always know him, as the artist thoughtfully introduces his name; otherwise a lively guessing match might result. The style of the pictures would naturally suggest the celebrities of a few centuries ago. They might be taken for Plato, Othello the Moor, Alaric, Julius Cæser, Richard III and a score of others whose faces figure in history. Even a composite of the many portraits could not blend or unite in one the discordant conceptions which we see every day. We must know Columbus by his deeds, and not by his pictures.

There are 216,330 school houses in the United States and only 8.5 per cent. of them are in cities. This is a striking illustration of the economy possible in a dense population. Every one of these schools should be represented in the national Columbian public school-celebration of Columbus Day, Oct. 21.

The Localities of the Birds. All our permanent residents among the birds, both large and small, are comparatively limited in their ranges. The crow is nearly as local as the woodchuck. He goes farther from home in quest of food, but his territory is well defined, both winter and summer. His place of reesting remains the same year after year. Once, while spending a few days at a mountain lake nearly surrounded by deep woods, my attention was attracted each night, just at sundown, by an osprey that always came from the same direction, dipped into the lake as he passed over it for a sip of its

The routine of his life was probably as marked as that of any of ours. He fished the waters of the Delaware all day, probably never going beyond a certain limit, and returned each night at sundown, as punctual as a day laborer, to his retreat in the forest. No stronger evidence of the safety of electric lighting installations can be afforded than the fact that a great many explosives factories are now being lit by electricity. It is obvious that in a building where the preparation of inflammable or highly explosive substances is carried on very special care should be taken in order to svoid even the smallest risk, and powder manufacturers now find that the electric light adds a considershle percentage over gas to the chances of safe operation. While electricity increases the safety of this branch of industry in one way it lessens it in another: There is a great deal of free electricity thrown off in various stages of manufacture, and the disposition of this,

so far as it can be removed out of harm's way, is a serious question. The charge of a powder cake press with ebonite plates may practically be considered as an electric pile, and a large amount of friction or electric inline; his eyes light gray; his complexion | fluence from outside may cause a suffifair and high colored. > The Meaning of Blunders Examining into the matter of blunders, particularly in tracing the course of the "mistakes, well meant," in our own lives, when we look back upon them with the cooler understanding of later years we are constrained to confees that the "mistake" must have been intended to be there, as well as the correct action, because the plan of our development has included both. Continuing to study clearly and deeply we must acknowledge that the mistakes and errors-nay, the very sins-when forsaken and forgiven, have helped the soul upward; that all have worked together to accomplish the result sought; that they must have been put there and meant so to be, and so that our "blunders" were not blunders at all, but although we sowed and watered often amiss there was always some increase given which achieved the good we aimed at, but failed to reach. And deepest of all we see that the divine love, which saw the end from the weeping, our disheartened sighs. Ah, infinitely greater it is, but like to the love we bear our own children, which is so deep and true that we endure to treat them harshly, and with seeming cruelty behold their tears, knowing surely that one day they will comprehend all the kindness.—Harper's Bazar.
