Painting, however, was her favorite art, and although she had never taken a lesson in her life, she reproduced Nature with her brush much more effectively than many persons who have spent years in study. On both sides of her family Mrs. Kellogg inherited inventive genius. Her mother, as well as her father invented many of the improvements now used in cotton mills throughout the country. Her busband and her only child, Clara Louise, the prima donna, survive her.

The Thornwell Orphanage.

This institution has had a remarkable history. Beginning with a half dollar, the gift of an orphan, it has developed into a little village of cottages for ores, with buildings for schoolwork, selbical training and general care.

There are 120 persons residing it it; orphans from ten different States, (from Massachusetts to Texas, from Michigan to Florida) and eight different denominations. They are gathered together to tomatoes fully ripe but sound. Chop be cared for and educated. Every fine 4 pepper pods, 3 green and 1 red, child is given an excellent business after extracting their seeds. Two teaeducation and is taught a trade. Dependence is placed for this sum, annually needed, on God alone, and on those whom he prompts to Store this catsup in glass bottles, leaving Presbyterians, but not one-third of the children came from that denomination, keep off mould and prevent fermentaand gifts are constantly being received from all manner of people and all parts of the world. Rev. Dr. Jacobs is the head of the institution.

Thanksgiving Day is coming! It is a good time to remember the orphaus. If you wish to have a share in this good work, you can send your gift addressed simply to "Thornwell Orphanage, Clinton S C. If it had not been for just such gifts as you will send, this school for orphans never could have been built and were they to cease it would needs close immediately. It has a nice array of buildings, but every building means just that many more mouths to feed.

for Gleveland, while, as he says, he praying for Weaver, must have been a very touching and pathetic one, and will doubtless enlist the sympathy of all his friends and the general public. There is, however, some comfort to be derived even from the greatest troubles and sacrifices, and it will be a great help and consolation to Col. Dargan if he will just bear in mind how well in miversal the custom is to pray practice is so common as not to excite any remark, except in cases that are specially noteworthy. Time, the all healer, will dry up Col. Dargan's tears and bring peace to his sorely troubled beart, and we venture the prediction that in less than twelve months, if Cleveland is elected, he will have attended the funeral of the Third Party and be burning incense at the shrine of Democracy. - Darlington Herald.

A Real Knight.

.A pleasing eight it was, I do assure you. Not the first part of the scene. for the little maid was crying bitterly. Something very serious must have happened. Wondering, I paused when, round a corner came my knight. On a prancing steed? Wearing a glittering belmet and greaves of brass No. This was a nineteenth-century knight, and they are as likely to be on foot as on horseback. Helmets are apt to be straw hats or Derby; and as for greaves-well, knickerbockers are more common today

This particular knight was about ten years old-slender, straight, open-eyed. Quickly he spied the damsel in distress. Swifely be came to ber aid. "What's the matter?" I heard him

Alse! the "matter" was that the bundle she held had "bursted," and its contents were open to view. Probably the small maid expected a hearty scolding for carelessness. And, indeed, whoever put that soiled shirt and the collars in her care, might reasonably have been
