THE WATCHMAN AND SOUTHRON, NOVEMBER 14, 1906.

diers.

just outside the entrance to the inn.

He was less English than ever, but he eventually gave her to understand that he had secured permission to escort her as far as Ganlook, a town in Graustark not more than fifteen miles from Edelweiss and at least two days from Balak. Two competent Axphain-ian guides had been retained, and the party was quite ready to start. He had been warned of the presence of brigands in the wild mountainous passes north of Ganlook. The Russians could go no farther than Gan-look because of a royal edict from Edelweiss forbidding the nearer, approach of armed forces. At that town, however, he was sure she easily could obtain an escort of Graustarkian sol-

As the big coach crawled up the mountain road and farther into the oppressive solitudes Beverly Calhoun drew from the difficult lieutenant considerable information concerning the state of affairs in Graustark. She had been eagerly awaiting the time when something definite could be learned.

Before leaving St. Petersburg early in the week she was assured that a state of war did not exist. The Princess Yetive had been in Edelweiss for six weeks. A formal demand was framed soon after her return from America requiring Dawsbergen to surrender the person of Prince Gabriel to the authorities of Graustark. To this demand there was no definite response, Dawsbergen insolently requesting time in Axphain immediately sent an envoy to Edelweiss to-say that all friendly relations between the two governments would cease unless Graustark took vigorous steps to recapture the royal assassin. On one side of the unhappy principality a strong, overbearing princess was egging Graustark on to fight, while on the other side an equally aggressive people defied Ye-tive to come and take the fugitive if she could. The poor princess was between two ugly alternatives, and a which to consider the proposition.

CHAPTER III.

1

PONDEROUS coach lumbered slowly, almost painfully, along the narrow road that skirted the base of a mountain. It was drawn by four horses, and upon the Seat sat two rough, unkempt Russians, whe holding the reins, the other lying back in a lazy doze. The month was Jone, and all the world seemed soft and sweet and joyous. To the right towed a turbulent mountain stream, bolling savagely with the alien waters of the flood season. Ahead of the creaking coach rode four horsemen, all heavily armed; another quartette followed some distance in the rear. At the side of the coach an officer of the Russian mounted police was riding easily, jangling his accouterments with a vigor that disheartened at least one occupant of the vehicle. The windows of the coach doors were lowered, permitting the fresh mountain air to caress fondly the face of the young woman who tried to find comfort in one of the broad seats. Since early morn she had struggled with the hardships of that seat, and the late aftercoon found her very much out of patience. The opposite seat was the rest-Ing place of a substantial colored woman and a stupendous pile of bags and boxes. The boxes were continually toppling over, and the bags were forever getting under the feet of the once placid servant, whose face, quite luck-Wy, was much too black to reflect the anger she was able otherwise, through years of practice, to conceal.

"How much farther have we to go, lieutenant?" asked the girl on the rear seat plaintively, even humbly. The man was very deliberate with his English. He had been recommended to her as the best linguist in the service at Radovitch, and he had a reputation to sustain.

"It another hour is but yet," he managed to inform her, with a confident smile.

"Oh, dear," she sighed, "a whole hour struggle seemed inevitable. At Balak of this!"

big officer was ever polite and alert. but she was ready to distrust him on the slightest excuse. These men could not help knowing that she was rich, and it was reasonable for them to suspect that she carried money and jewels with her. In her mind's eye she could picture these traitors rifling her bags and boxes in some dark pass, and then there were other horrors that almost petrified her when she allowed herself to think of them.

Here and there the travelers passed by rude cots where dwelt woodmen and mountaineers, and at long intervals a solitary but picturesque horseman stood aside and gave them the road. As the coach penetrated deeper into the gorge signs of human life and actvity became fewer. The sun could not send his light into this shadowy tomb of granite. The rattle of the wheels and the clatter of the horses' hoofs sounded like a constant crash of thunder in the ears of the tender traveler, a dainty morsel among hawks and wolves.

There was an unmistakable tremor in her voice when she at last found heart to ask the officer where they were to spend the night. It was far past noon, and Aunt Fanny had suggested opening the lunch baskets. One of the guides was called back, the leader being as much in the dark as his charge. "There is no village within twenty miles," he said, "and we must sleep in the pass." Beverly's voice faltered. "Out here in all this awful"- Then she caught herself quickly. It came to her suddenly that she must not let these men see that she was, apprehensive. Her voice was a trifle shrill and her eyes glistened with a strange new light as she went on, changing her tack completely: "How romantic! I've often wanted to do something like this." The officer looked bewildered and said nothing. Aunt Fanny was speechless. Later on, when the lieutenant had gone ahead to confer with the guides about the suspicious actions of a small troop of horsemen they had seen, Beverly confided to the old negress that she was frightened almost out of her boots, but that she'd die before the men should see a sign of cowardice in a Calhoun. Aunt Fanny was not so proud and imperious. It was with difficulty that her high strung young mistress suppressed the wails that had long been under restraint in Aunt Fanny's huge and turbulent bosom.

"Good Lawd, Miss Bev'ly, dey'll chop us all to pieces an' take ouah jewl'ry an' money an' clo'es an' ev'ything else we done got about us. Good Lawd, le's tu'n back, Miss Bev'ly. We ain' got no mo' show out heah in dese mountains dan a"-

"Be still, Aunt Fanny!" commanded Beverly, with a fine show of courage. "You must be brave. Don't you see way to Siberia. Disguised as a coachman, he was seeking life and safety in Graustark or any out of the way place. It mattered little to him where the escort concluded to go. He was going ahead. He dared not go back; he must go on.

At the end of half an hour the officer returned. All hope had gone from his face. "It is useless!" he cried out. "The guides refuse to proceed. See! They are going off with their countrymen! We are lost without them. I do not know what to do. We cannot get to Ganlook. I do not know the way, and the danger is great. Ah, madam. here they come! The Cossacks are going back."

As he spoke the surly mutineers were riding slowly toward the coach. Every man had his pistol on the high pommel of the saddle. Their faces wore an ugly look. As they passed the officer one of them, pointing ahead of him with his sword, shouted savagely, "Balak!"

His only thought was to get away.

It was conclusive and convincing. They were deserting her.

"Oh, oh, oh! The cowards!" sobbed Beverly in rage and despair. "I must go on! Is it possible that even such men would leave"- the officer, who, raising his cap to her, commanded at the same time the driver to turn his horses and follow the escort to Balak.

"What is that?" demanded Beverly la alarm.

From far off came the sound of firearms. A dozen shots were fired and reverberated down through the gloomy pass ahead of the coach.

"They are fighting somewhere in the hills in front of us," answered the now broken rumble, and then the coach ALEXANDER GETS SIX YEARS. stopped with a mighty lurch.

Dragging herself from the corner, poor Beverly Calhoun, no longer a disdainful heroine, gazed piteously out into the shadows, expecting the murderous blade of the driver to meet her as she did so. Pauloff had swung from the box of the coach and was peering first into the woodland below and then upon the rocks to the left. He wore the expression of a man trapped and seeking means of escape. Suddenly he darted behind the coach, almost brushing against Beverly's hat as he passed the window. She opened her lips to call him, but even as she did so he took to his heels and raced back over the road they had traveled so precipitously. Overcome by surprise and dismay, she only could watch the flight in silence. Less than a hundred feet from where the coach was standing he turned to the right and was lost among the rocks. Ahead, four horses, covered with sweat, were panting and heaving as if in great distress after their mad run. Aunt Fanny was still moaning and praying by turns in the bottom of the carriage. Darkness was settling down upon the pass, and objects a hundred yards away were swallowed by the gloom. There was no sound save the blowing of the tired animals and the moaning of the old negress. Beverly realized with a sinking heart that they were alone and helpless in the mountains, with night upon them.

She never knew where the strength and courage came from, but she forced open the stubborn coach door and scrambled to the ground, looking frantically in all directions for a single sign of hope. In the most despairing the part of any one suffering from terror she had ever experienced she started toward the lead horses, hoping against hope that at least one of her men had remained faithful.

A man stepped quietly from the inner side of the road and advanced with the uncertain tread of one who is overcome by amazement.' He was a stranger and wore an odd, uncouth garb. The failing light told her that he was not one of her late protectors. She shrank back with a faint cry of alarm, ready to fly to the protecting arms of hopeless Aunt Fanny if her uncertain legs could carry her. At the same instant another ragged stranger, then two, three, four She was interrupted by the voice of or five, appeared as if by magic, some near her, others approaching from the shadows.

"Who-who in heaven's name are you?" she faltered. The sound of her own voice in a measure restored the courage that had been paralyzed. Unconsciously this slim sprig of southern valor threw back her shoulders and lifted her chin. If they were brigands they should not find her a cringing coward. After all, she was a Calhoun,

The man she had first observed stop-

Former Wealthy Augusta Cotton Factor Plead Guilty to Charge of Embezzlement.

Augusta, Ga., Nov. 6 .- Thomas W. Alexander, formerly a wealthy cotton factor and prominent club man, who was arrested at Fittsburg September 15, after having fled from this city July 8, leaving debts amounting to $200,000, today plead guilty to an indictment charging embezzlement and was sentenced to six years imprisonment.

DR. GILL WYLIE'S MALARIA.

Treatment a Sure Cure For Chronic Malaria.

A few days ago, while at Great Falls, we noticed posted in many conspicious places the treatment below for chronic malaria. Working in the summer along the river in a section partially malarial, it was naturally expected that this treacherous disease would lay hold on the workmen. So the President of the Southern Power Company, Dr. Gill Wylie, the eminent surgeon of New York took great procaution against malaria. among the workmen by posting every where his treatment of the disease. The very fact that it bears his sigature makes it well worth trial on malaria in any form.

Directions for Treating Chronic Malarta /

Take four 1-10 grs. of calomel after dinner at night, and the next morning a saline laxative, a seidlitz powder or mineral water, sufficient to give one free movement of the bowels a day. After each meal take three of the 3 gr. capsules, or two of the 5 gr. capsules of quinine with the juice of a half of a lemon in a half glass of water, so as to insure its absorption, making 27 to 30 grs. a day. In large, strong people the amount of the quinine can be increased up to 40 grs. a day instead of 30 grs. Keep this calomel and quinine up for four consecutive days in the above quantities. If during the four days the quinine makes your head buzz or disturbs you excessively, take 20 grs. of bromide of potash in a half glass of water in the afternoon or evening.

After taking 27 or 30 grs. a day for four + days, then take 3 grs. three

"We soon be dar, Miss Bev'ly. Jes" 30' mak' up yo' min' to res' easy-like, an' we"- But the faithful old colored woman's advice was lost in the wrath-In exclamation that accompanied another dislodgment of bags and boxes. The wheels of the coach had dropped suddenly into a deep rut. Aunt Fanay's growls were scarcely more potent than poor Miss Beverly's moans.

"It is getting worse and worse," exclaimed Aunt Fanny's mistress petulantly. "I'm black and blue from head to foot, aren't you, Aunt Fanny?"

"Ah cain' say as to de blue, Miss Bev'ly. Hit's a mos' monstrous bad road, she 'nough. Stay up dar, will .yo'?' she concluded, jamming a bag into an upper corner.

Miss Calhoun, tourist extraordinary. again consulted the linguist in the saddle. She knew at the outset that the quest would be hopeless, but she could think of no better way to pass the next hour than to extract a mite of information from the officer.

"Now for a good old chat," she said. beaming a smile upon the grizzled Russian. "Is there a decent hotel in the "willage?" she asked.

They were on the edge of the village before she succeeded in finding out all That she could, and it was not a great Seal, either. She learned that the town of Balak was in Axphain, scarcely a mile from the Graustark line. There was an eating and sleeping house on the main street, and the population of the place did not exceed 300.

When Miss Beverly awoke the next morning, sore and distressed, she looked back upon the night with a horror that sleep had been kind enough to in-Carupt only at intervals. The wretched hostehy lived long in her secret catalogue of terrors. Her bed was not a bed; it was a torture. The room, the table, the-but it was all too odious for description. Fatigue was her only friend in that miserable hole. Aunt Fanny had slept on the floor near her "mistress' cot, and it was the good old colored woman's grumbling that awoke Beverly. The sun was climbing up the mountains in the east, and there was an air of general activity about the place. Beverly's watch told her that it was past 8 o'clock.

"Good gracious!" she exclaimed. "It's nearly noon, Aunt Fanny. Hurry along here and get me up. We must serve this abominable place in ten min-"tes." She was up and racing about excitedly.

"Befe' breakfas'?" demanded Aunt Fanny weakly.

dashed to death down the side of the said, powerless. And you are, besides versing sullenly and excitedly with The officer in charge had been reczen along and have the woman put up all these. in the clutches of a band of mountain, but apart from this her a preakfast for us, and we'll eat it on ommended as a trusted servant of the much gesticulation. The driver, a stolquick brain was evolving all sorts of | merci'ess cutthroats." the road. I positively refuse to eat czar; an American consul had secured id creature, seemingly indifferent to all possible endings-none short of absomother mouthful in that awful dining | the escort for her direct from the fronthat was going on, alone remained at [TO BE CONTINUED.] lute disaster. tier patrol authorities. Men high in his post. The situation, apparently room. I'll be down in ten minutes." Even as she prayed that something power had vouched for the integrity dangerous, was certainly most annoy-She was down in less. Sleep, no might intervene to check the mad rush Bound to Disagree. of the detachment, but all this was for- ing. But if Beverly could have read matter how hard earned, had revived and to deliver her from the horrors of Hicks-The idea of his marrying Miss gotten in the mighty solitude of the | the mind of that silent figure on the her spirits materially. She pronounced Roxley! Why, he's a dyspeptic! Wicks the moment the raucous voice of the mountains. She was beginning to fear box she would have felt slightly reberself ready for anything. There was driver was heard calling to his horses, -What has that to do with it? She a wholesome disdain for the rigors of her escort more than she feared the lieved, for he was infinitely more anxand the pace became slower. The aw- has plenty of money, and- Hicksious to proceed than even she, but from the coming ride through the mountains brigands of the hills. in the way she gave orders for the backs as they role ahead of her. The sian convert who had escaped on the severe, the clatter resolved itself into a him; she's too rich -- Exchange Innggists. sant. The Russian officer met her it was learned that Axphain had recently sent a final appeal to the government of Graustark, and it was no secret that something like a threat accompanied the message.

Prince Gabriel was in complete control at Serros and was disposed to laugh at the demands of his late captors. His half brother, the dethroued Prince Dantan, was still hiding in the fastnesses of the hills, protected by a small company of nobles, and there was no hope that he ever could regain his crown. Gabriel's power over the army was supreme. The general public admired Dantan, but it was helpless in the face of circumstances.

"But why should Axphain seek to harass Graustark at this time?" demanded Beverly Calhoun in perplexity and wrath. "I should think the brutes would try to help her."

"There is an element of opposition to the course the government is taking," the officer informed her in his own way, "but it is greatly in the minority. The Axphainians have hated Graustark since the last war, and the princess despises this American. It is an open fact that the Duke of Mizrox leads the opposition to Princess Volga, and she is sure to have him beheaded if the chance affords. He is friendly to Graustark and has been against the policy of his princess from the start." "I'd like to hug the Duke of Mizrox."

cried Beverly warmly. The officer did not understand her, but Aunt Fanny was scandalized.

"Good Lawd!" she muttered to the boxes and bags.

As the coach rolled deeper and deeper into the rock shadowed wilderness Beverly Calhoun felt an undeniable sensation of awe creeping over her. The brave, impetuous girl had plunged gayly into the project which now led her into the deadliest of uncertainties with but little thought of the consequences.

The first stage of the journey by coach had been good fun. They had passed along pleasant roads, through quaint villages and among interesting people, and progress had been rapid. The second stage had presented rather terrifying prospects, and the third day promised even greater vicissitudes. Looking from the coach windows out upon the quiet, desolate grandeur of her surroundings, poor Beverly began to appreciate how abjectly helpless and alone she was. Her companions were ugly, vicious looking men, any one of whom could inspire terror by a look. She had intrusted herself to the care of these strange creatures in the mo-

we can't turn back? It's just as dangerous and a heap sight more so. If we let on we're not one bit afraid they'll respect us, don't you see, and men never-harm women whom they respect."

"Uniph!" grunted Aunt Fanny, with exaggerated irony.

"Well, they never do!" maintained Beverly, who was not at all sure about it. "And they look like real nice men -honest men, even though they have such awful whiskers."

"Dey's de wust trash Ah eveh did see," exploded Aunt Fanny.

"Sh! Don't let them hear you," whispered Beverly.

In spite of her terror and perplexity she was compelled to smile. It was all so like the farce comedies one sees at the theater.

As the officer rode up his face was pale in the shadowy light of the afternoon, and he was plainly very nervous.

"What is the latest news from the front?" she inquired cheerfully.

"The men refuse to ride on," he exclaimed, speaking rapidly, making it still harder for her to understand. "Our advance guard has met a party of hunters from Axphain. They insist that you -'the fine lady in the coach'-are the Princess Yetive, returning from a secret visit to St. Petersburg, where you went to plead for assistance from the czar."

Beverly Calhoun gasped in astonishment. It was too incredible to believe. It was actually ludicrous. She laughed heartily. "How perfectly absurd." "I am well aware that you are not the Princess Yetive," he continued emphatically, "but what can I do? The men won't believe me. They swear they have been tricked and are panic stricken over the situation. The hunters tell them that the Axphain authorities, fully aware of the hurried flight of the princess through these wilds, are preparing to intercept her. A large detachment of soldiers is already across the Graustark frontier. It is only a question of time before the 'red legs' will be upon them. I have assured them that their beautiful charge is not the princess, but an American girl, and that there is no mystery about the coach and escort. Ali in vain. The Axphain guides already feel that their heads are on the block, while as for the Cossacks, not even my dire threats of the awful anger of the white czar when he finds they have disobcyed his commands will move them."

"Speak to your men once more, sir, and promise them big purses of gold fundamental fear that she would be "Very well, Aunt Fanny, you can had time to consider the situation. half dead; you are indeed, as you have colloquy. All the men were ahead con-frightened officer. Turning quickly, be saw the deserting horsemen halt, listen a minute and then spur their horses. He cried out sharply to the driver: "Come, there! Turn round! We have no time to lose!"

With a savage grin, the hitherro motionless driver hurled some insulting remark at the officer, who was already following his men, now in fuit flight down the road, and, settling himself firmly on the seat, taking a fresh grip of the reins, he yelled to his horses, at the same time lashing them furiously with his whip, and started the coach ahead at a fearful pace. His only thought was to get away as far as possible from the Russian officer. ' ground. then deliberately desert the coach and | its occupants and take to the hills.

CHAPTER IV.

HOROUGHLY mestided by the action of the driver and at length terrified by the pace that carried them careening along the narrow road, Beverly cried out to him, her voice shrill with alarm. Aunt Fanny was crouching on the floor of the coach between the seats, groaning and praving.

"Stop! Where are you going?" cried Beverly, putting her head recklessly through the window. If the man heard her he gave no evidence of the fact. His face was set forward, and he was guiding the horses with a firm, unquivering hand. The coacl. rattled and bounded along the dangerous way hewn in the side of the mountain. A misstep or a false turn might easily start the clumsy vehicle rolling down the declivity on the right. The convict was taking desperate chances and, with a cool, calculating brain, prepared to leap to the ground in case of accident and save himself, without a thought for the victims inside.

"Stop! Turn around!" she cried in a frenzy. "We shall be killed. Are you crazy :"

By this time they had struck a descent in the road and were rushing ; along at breakneck speed into oppressive shadows that bore the first imprints of night. Realizing at last that her cries were falling upon purposely deaf ears, Beverly Calhoun sank back into the seat, weak and terror stricken. It was plain to her that the horses were uot running away, for the man had been lashing them furiously. There was but one conclusion-he was deliberately taking her farther into the mountain fastnesses, his purpose ped near the horses' heads and peered intently at her from beneath a broad and rakish hat. He was tall and appeared to be more respectably clad than his fellows, although there avas not one who looked as though he passessed a complete outfit of wearing apparel.

"Poor wayfarers, may it please your highness," replied the tall vagabond. bowing low. To her surprise, he spore in very good English. His voice was clear, and there was a tinge of polite irony in the tones. "But all people are alike in the mountains. The king and the thief, the princess and the jade live in the common fold." And his hat swung so low that it touched the

"I am powerless. I only implore you to take what valuables you may find and let us proceed unharmed!" she cried rapidly, eager to have it over.

"Pray, how can your highness proceed? You have no guile, no driver, no escort," said the man mockingly. Beverly looked at him appealingly, utterly without words to reply. The tears were welling to her eyes, and her heart was throbbing like that of a captured bird. In after life she was able to picture in her mind's eye all the details of that tableau in the mountain pass-the hopeless coach, the steaming horses, the rakish bandit and his picturesque men, the towering crags and a mite of a girl facing the end of everything. "Your highness is said to be brave. but even your wonderful courage can times a day, or one capsule after each real for four days longer.

After this a tonic pill which has arsenic and iron in it may be taken three times a day for several weeks if 着 indicated.

Then if at any time after this you have the pains in the back of your neck and exhausted feelings, and more or less depression or disturbed digestion, have your blood examined and report to me for further treatment will be indicated. It would be perfectly safe if the same general symptoms return to repeat the above treatment in two or three months or more, especially if you live in a malarial district where there are mosquitoes.

By using Merk's bi-sulphate of cuinine, 5 grs. dissolved in a teaspoonful of sterril water, an injection can be made in the deep muscles of the buttocks with a sterril glass syringe, giving too injections of 5 grs. each instead of one of the 9 or 10 gr. doses by mouth. In extreme cases two of these 10 gr. doses may be given by hypedermic instead of by mouth, more effectively.

(Signed) Dr. W. Gill Wylie.

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, 0.

We, the undersingned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obliga. tions made by his firm.

Walding, Kinnan & Marvin,

Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood 🌤 a..d mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75c. per bottle. Sold by all druggisti.

Take Hall's Family Pills for con-8 10-1m stipation.

There were 17,222 more pupils in New York city's public schools in September of this year than in Septtember, 1905.

"Goodness, Aunt Fanny, is that all *The best treatment for indigestion known only to himself. A hundred terment of inspired courage, and now she when we reach Ganlook. I have no 'you think about?" and trouble of the stomach is to rest rors presented themselves to her as was constrained to regret her action. money or valuables with me, but there i "Well, honey, yo'll be thinkin' she lay huddled against the side of the the leader pleasantly. "Your escort the stomach. It can be rested by True, they had proved worthy pro-I can obtain plenty," said Beveriy, monghly serious 'bout breakfas' 'long coach, her eyes closed tightly, her tenstarvation or by the use of a good dito'abds 'leben o'clock. Dat li'l tum- tectors as far as they had gone, but shrewdly thinking it better that they der body tossed furiously about with my o' yourn'll be pow'ful mad 'cause ; the very possibilities that lay in their thing stronger than shadows; your gestant which will digest the food should believe her to be without funds. the sway of the vehicle. There was the The cavalcade had halted during this driver has deserted; your horses are power were appalling, now that she eaten, thus taking the work off the Jo' didn' "stomach. At the proper temperature, a single teaspoonful of Kodol will wholly digest 3,000 grains of food. It relieves the present annoyance, puts the stomach in shape to satisfactorily perform its functions. Good for indigetsion, sour stomach, flatulence, palpitation of the heart and dyspepsia. Kodol is made in strict conformity with the National Pure Treachery seemed printed on their far different reasons. He was a Rus- ful rocking and the jolting grew less That's just it. She'll never agree with Food and Drug Law. Sold by all