

NO LONGER BOSS.

THE REPUBLICAN ORGANIZATION DOWNS ROOSEVELT.

Primary Bill Defeated Despite Urging of the Former President and of Governor Hughes—Assembly Banks.

Albany, N. Y., June 30.—Theodore Roosevelt was beaten decisively today. Whatever may be the final outcome of his first advent in politics since his retirement from the White House, he met defeat flat-footed at the hands of the Republican organization in the assembly.

Another defeat at the hands of the senate is regarded as probable. The senators sat up most of the night debating whether they should accede to the ex-president's wishes and finally voted to adjourn sine die at 2 o'clock tomorrow. This is taken as an indication that the senate will agree with the assembly.

The Cobb direct primary bill was killed in the assembly after a long hard fight by a vote, 80 to 83. The Republicans in the senate held a caucus tonight, but only 23 senators were there. They voted to make a party measure of the Cobb bill with the amendments proposed by Lloyd C. Griscom, chairman of the New York county Republican committee and favored by Col. Roosevelt. But it takes 26 votes to pass a bill in the senate, so that the situation was not cleared.

There is talk of still another special session. The assembly this afternoon voted to adjourn at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, and the senate concurred. If the legislature quits work with no primary bill passed and without having provided for necessary financial measures, the leaders say Gov. Hughes may call it back again.

Roosevelt was the potent figure in today's contest. It was a clear-cut issue between the ex-president and the "organization" leaders and the leaders won.

It was a long, hot, tense day. From the moment that Col. Roosevelt sent his telegraph to Mr. Griscom urging the passage of the bill, things hummed. The situation suddenly became one which was regarded of national significance. The question was whether Mr. Roosevelt of Sagamore Hill was as mighty as a Roosevelt of Washington. Those who had previously supported the Cobb measure, including even Gov. Hughes, slipped into the background. In front of them all was the commanding figure of Theodore Roosevelt. Speaker Wadsworth was frankly glad at the turn things had taken.

"The action of the assembly today," Speaker Wadsworth said, "should not be construed as a gratuitous slap at the ex-president or at the governor. The assembly feels that it gave the fullest and most deliberate consideration to the primary reform at the regular session.

"The supreme issue is whether the assembly shall swallow its convictions and deliberately reverse its honest judgment and thereby announce to the legislatures of the future that the legislative branch of the government, supposedly independent, can be coerced and forced to occupy a secondary position in our system of government. It is a question far beyond that of the merits or demerits of direct primaries."

After a debate of several hours the senate tonight voted 24 to 23 to adopt the assembly resolution to adjourn sine die tomorrow at 2 p. m.

SEE MISS ROOSEVELT A BRIDE.

Oyster Bay Folk Find Engagement Hint in Reception She Gives J. T. Williams, Jr.

(From the New York World.)

Miss Ethel Roosevelt entertained as her personal guest at Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay, yesterday, James Thompson Williams, Jr., a protege of President Taft and aspirant for a seat in the United States senate from the new State of New Mexico. They spent the day together and were so absorbed in each other as to excite the surmise in Oyster Bay that wedding bells will ring again for a Roosevelt not long after the echoes of the last ringing subside.

Mr. Williams arrived on a train with Gen. Luke Wright, former Secretary of War. Colonel Roosevelt's auto was waiting to receive General Wright, but Miss Ethel drove to the station in a dogcart for Mr. Williams. She whisked the cart past the other vehicles at the platform and waited across the roadway.

Several newspaper men recognized Mr. Williams. Before they could reach him Miss Ethel called to him. Considerable noise attended the arrival of the train, but her welcoming shout caught his ear and he ran across the roadway and leaped to the high seat besides her. They clasped hands for an instant and the next moment the horse was off at a lively trot. The two strolled off together after luncheon and remained away until it was time for Mr. Williams to leave, when Miss Ethel drove him to the station for a late afternoon train.

Mr. Williams is a son of the Bishop of South Carolina. At one time he worked for the Associated Press in Washington and corresponded for a Boston newspaper. In the last national campaign he served Postmaster-General Frank Hitchcock as confidential secretary, and made the swing of the country with Mr. Taft.

After the campaign he became a member of the United States Civil Service Commission, from which he resigned on account of ill health, taking up a residence in New Mexico. There have been reports that President Taft would appoint him to an important Federal office, but his activities in behalf of the new Statehood act indicated that he would be a candidate for the senate from New Mexico.

MR. LANG ON ROOSEVELT.

Can The Historian Be Both Truthful And Readable? Asks the Famous Essayist.

(Andrew Lang, in the London Morning Post.)

Mr. Roosevelt, in his Romanes lecture at Oxford, "spoke of many things," as the walrus proposed to do, and especially of why empires "go to the demnition bow-wows," in the words of a countryman of Machiavelli. Personally, from my own reading of history, I think that empires "go to the crows" in the Athenian phrase, because they are apt to bite off more in their early days than they can assimilate when they develop into democracies, as they mostly do. This was the opinion expressed by Alcibiades in a Romanes lecture of his own, reported, with manifest sympathy, by Thucydides.

Mr. Roosevelt touched a chord that woke a deeper and fuller response in my soul when he spoke of the nature of history and of how it ought to be written. If the facts reported by the historian be not facts, be not true, he said, then the book, however attractive and entertaining, is not history at all, though it may hold a respectable place on the crowded shelves devoted to fiction. This is very certain, but it is scarcely less true that, as Mr. Roosevelt added, if history be not entertaining it is not literature. Now, Mr. Roosevelt demanded from history that it shall play a double part, and be both true and diverting, both science and literature. If it is not "readable" it is not literature; if it is not true ("at least as far as it is able") it is not science. Though this is a view popular enough in itself, to construct a history both literary and scientific seems a task beyond the powers of modern intelligence. Mr. Roosevelt's demands try the historian too high. Nobody asks other scientific characters to be at once scientific and literary; and few ask other gentlemen of letters to be scientific. The algebraist, the chemist, the biologist (not that I know exactly what the biologist does), are not expected to be entertaining, and but few, and these deeply mistaken souls, expect the novelist to be scientific.

A person who set out to write an entirely agreeable history of England, beginning with the Norman conquest, found himself unable to proceed. He could not in conscience deny that the battle of Hastings was not a victory for the English Army; yet the fact was disagreeable and depressing to young students, dampening their interest. After turning over in his mind the propriety of making Harold revive in the arms of Edith Swan-neck, recover health and turn up as Hereford the Wake, the avenger of his country, the would-be historian renounced his task. Naturally a conscientious man, he could not bring himself to be interesting and agreeable at the expense of truth.

Yet many historians—readable historians—do in a milder way what this author could not persuade himself to undertake. Their only limit in the way of fiction is the generally known, the common memories of the school-room. They must not deny that Charles I had his head cut off, but, with Lombroso, they say that Henry VII cut off the heads of his six wives, because at this point the general memory is rather hazy. In fact, the accurate historian is (as Mr. Roosevelt appeared, to this listener, to suggest) to accumulate large masses of facts, materials, to be handled later by an interesting and readable historian, who will give us his own literature blended with the science of his unreadable predecessor. More, if his work be science, it will be popular science, the mother of mischief. As Russelas, Prince of Abyssinia, was convinced by his tutor "that no man can be a poet," so I am inclined to think that no man can be a historian.

The Practical Use of Polar Research.

Captain R. F. Scott, the famous Polar explorer, makes an interesting statement in the July Standard Magazine relative to the main object in undertaking his forthcoming expedition in search of the South Pole.

If my only object, he says, were to reach a certain geographical point, that would hardly be worth the effort, endurance and privation it would entail. The future work of exploration consists in the systematic intensification of geographical knowledge and in the endeavor to appreciate and explain the mechanism and organization of the globe. The age of exploration, in the sense in which the discoverer is the first comer, is drawing to a close. The age of the scientific study of the earth in its completeness has already begun, and the results of this form of discovery it is impossible yet to foresee. Geography has almost accomplished its task so far as the extension of its area is concerned.

When the Terra Nova leaves England's shores and turns her prow southward, it will be for scientific purposes, for the results of science are the most important an expedition can reap. The scientific objects of the expedition may be briefly stated as follows:

1. To explore King Edward's land, to throw further light on the nature and extent of the Great Barrier ice formation, and to continue the survey of the high mountainous region of Victoria Land.
2. To examine the entirely unknown region of King Edward's Land and continue the survey of the rocks of Victoria Land.
3. To obtain synchronous observations at two fixed stations, as well as the weather records of sledge journeys.
4. To duplicate the records of the elements made by the Discovery expedition with magnetographs. The comparison would throw most important light on secular changes.

In addition, attention will be paid to the study of marine biology at both stations and in the ship, and the examination of physical phenomenon will be continued.

Opinions of Weight.

"I have long felt that the Young Men's Christian Association was the most promising agency for promoting industrial education in a general way. Now I know it. You have the right spirit, and are on the right track. I hope to see a great deal more initiative on the part of the employers and the articulation of systematic education with an enlightened apprenticeship system."—Leslie W. Miller, President, Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art.

"In the new American movement for industrial efficiency the Young Men's Christian Association anticipated the demand, and offers most employers and labor unions some features of its educational work. Moreover, it has laid more emphasis upon the human element in industry than has been given by most others in providing for technical training."—Prof. Graham Taylor.

"The future of the Association's educational work depends upon two things: First, the large ideas of what can and must be done; second, the large ideas of the means which must be provided to realize them. This means liberal ideas on courses and other features and vigorous and hearty support. As we put the money in we get results, but they are tremendously multiplied. This is the best kind of investment I know for making men out of money."—Walter L. Hervey, Ph. D., chairman board of examiners, board of education, New York.
