And look, with sad and knowing eyes, Into my own, that show no bliss-But how I yearn to tell them this: To know what needing is about You'll have to badly be without! The day must dawn into your life, When like a demon with a knife You'll be assa'led by surly thirst-And know the fellow at his worst! The thievish hands of chilly death Must almost take away your breath; And hunger's claws must paw into The very vital parts of you!
